THE CONNECTING BATH (July 19).—Hubby and wifey part company and their divorce suit comes off. They arrive in the city and, unconsciously, put up at the same hotel. There is only one bath left, connecting between two rooms, and they are assigned to these rooms. The similarity of their names causes the house detective to watch the rooms.

Wifey goes to take a bath and is scared away by Hubby's sneezing. Hubby enters the bath room and locks the communicating door. Wifey, indignant, beats on the door. Hubby sniffs the perfume she has left behind, and thinks of his wife. He writes a note of apology and retires. Wifey sniffs the cigarette butt he has left and thinks of her husband. She also writes a note.

The house detective, his suspicions aroused by the constant slamming of doors, enters and arrests Hubby for playing Bo-peep under the door. Then he goes to arrest Wifey. Each gets into the other's room and sees his or her photograph on the dressing table. With a cry of joy they clinch as they meet in the bathroom, and when the detective interferes they drown him in the tub.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

THE DUPE (Three Parts—July 14).—The cast: Frank Jackson (Frank Mayo); Marjorie Rogers (Virginia Norden); Her Husband (Neil Hardin); Florence Milburn (Lillian West); Trowbridge (Daniel Gilfether).

Working his way through college, Frank Jackson becomes chauffeur for Rogers, a wealthy clubman, who neglects his wife. Mrs. Rogers falls in love with Frank. Rogers catches Frank examining his pocketbook and accuses him of theft. He then demands that Frank furnish him with divorce evidence. Frank accepts, then warns Mrs. Rogers. She begs him to stay and protect her. Rogers forces attentions on his wealthy ward, Florence Milburn. She meets Frank and they fall in love. Mrs. Rogers declares her passion for Frank, and he goes away. Detectives hired by Rogers find her about to kill herself. Frank finds Rogers trying to kiss Florence and beats him off. The lovers are happy while Rogers and his wife are miserable.

SIBYL'S SCENARIO (Three Parts—July 21).—The cast: Merceds (Maries Empress); Jim Harper (Philo McCullough); Carib (Makato Inokuchi); Bernice (Lucile Pietz); Mary (Molly McConnell); Hale (Bert Ensminger). Direction of H. M. & E. D. Horkheimer. Scenario written by Miss Sibyl Smith.

Mercedes Gonzales, a Spanish cabaret dancer, learns by telephone that her daughter, Bernice, has been kidnapped by James Harper, a wealthy clubman. The information is given by an old nurse, named Mary, who has reared the girl in ignorance of her mother. Harper's accomplice repents and brings the girl back. She overhears enough to send her to the city in search of her mother.

Meanwhile Mercedes, disguised as a boy, breaks into Harper's apartments and is captured by his Oriental servant, Carib. Carib confesses that he, too, hates his master, and they plot to have him shanghaied. All goes well with the exception that Harper is drowned. Mercedes and her daughter are united.

NESTOR.

KILL THE UMPIRE (July 17).—The cast: Mr. Fan (Eddie Lyons); Mrs. Fan (Eileen Sedgwick); "Bull" Dugan (Lee Moran); Jane (Mina Cunard).

Mr. Fan is a baseball fan. The particular bane of his life is the umpire. No matter how the game goes, the umpire does the wrong thing. Mrs. Fan knows as much about the game as the wildest savage, and her husband's talk of the game is naturally wasted on her. One day she is particularly worried over her husband's remarks at the table and he shows her a notice in the papers in "fan lingo" stating that a new umpire has been secured in the person of "Bull" Dugan. The said "Bull" has quite a reputation for quieting players who get unruly, and even has the fans themselves using the soft pedal.

He speaks to his friends about it and they all agree the change is for the worse. Mr. Fan rages all the way to the ball grounds and threatens dire things to the umpire should he not do the right thing. The game is called. Mr. Fan at once draws attention to himself by guying the umpire, and for a moment "gets the umpire's goat." However, it is for a moment only, and the renowned "Bull" takes a long look at Mr. Fan, intending to settle with him later. The game is an exciting one. Mr. Fan keeps guying the umpire and, in a frenzy at a decision which allows the visiting team to win, Mr. Fan hurls an empty bottle, which knocks Mr. "Bull" out. His friends help him to get out.

Mrs. Fan arrives home and finds a card from a former girl friend who is visiting in the town and will be glad to have Mrs. Fan call upon her. Mr. Fan and a friend decide to have a drink on the way home and stop in at a saloon. Unfortunately, it is the same one that "Bull" has stopped at and the two come face to face. Mr. Fan takes safety in flight. "Bull" pursues, but fear lends wings to Mr. Fan's feet, and he arrives home safely. Jane, the friend, phones Mrs. Fan and begs to bring her husband over, stating that he is a baseball man, and then Mrs. Fan tells her that their husbands must surely meet as they both are in the game.

They meet that night. Mr. Fan almost has heart failure when he sees "Bull," but peace is finally declared and now Mr. Fan is the most ardent supporter of Umpire Dugan.

THE COME ON (July 21).—The cast: Mary Griggs (Jane Gail); Fanny (Clara Byers); John Pierson (Matt Moore). Written by John C. Brownell. Produced by Matt Moore.

Mary Griggs from Hoop Centre, Kansas, arrives in New York, and as she is signing at the hotel register, attracts the attention of Blake and Riley, a couple of confidence men. The bellboy takes her bag and shows her to her room, where she exhibits a huge roll of bills. She tips him a nickel and the boy promptly hands it back to her in disgust. On his return to the hotel lobby the boy tells the clerk what happened.

We now see Blake and Riley going to the phone booth, while Harrington, an accomplice, goes up in the elevator and gains access to Mary's room. He holds out his hand and asks her if she isn't Mary Griggs of Hoop Centre, Kansas. Mary greets him cordially, and gets very communicative about her private affairs. Meanwhile, Blake has called up Fanny, another accomplice, who plays the "little sister," and tells her to prepare a lunch for four. After her chat with Harrington, Mary agrees to meet his sister at luncheon, after which he is to take her to the lawyer's office in a taxi.

Before leaving the hotel lobby, Harrington introduces Mary to Blake and Riley, and invites them to the proposed luncheon at his sister's apartment. The "little sister" greets them, and when Fanny is out of the room Mary gazes with admiration at the apartment, and remarks: "I'll have a home like this, when I get the $300,000." The confidence men question her in regard to that large amount and she shows them a letter from her lawyer, John Pierson, informing her that her uncle has left her $300,000, stipulating that in order to obtain this inheritance she must first show $5,000 in cash, honestly earned. She said she had the cash with her.

Later, the crooks accompany Mary to the law offices of John Pierson. Mary suddenly discovers that she has lost her roll, and gets excited. Riley takes Blake aside and whispers: "Fanny must have double-crossed us. Beat it to Sullivan's and get $5,000—tell him he'll be in on the deal." Shortly afterwards Blake returned with the required amount. The lawyer now comes out of his private office and confers with Mary. Then he turns to the confidence men and says: "You'll find cigars in my private office, gentlemen." As soon as the confidence men have left the room, he takes a key from his pocket and noiselessly locks the door after them. Then he removes his disguise and kisses Mary as she shows him the $5,000 that Blake had just handed her, together with the original $5,000, which she has been concealing all the time.

The "come on" has beat them at their own game.

VICTOR.

THE GENTLE ART OF BURGLARY (July 18).—The cast: Martin Ellis (William Garwood); Eva Warren (Violet Mersereau); "Second Story Pete" (Paddy Sullivan). Written and produced by Raymond L. Schrock.

Martin Ellis goes to visit his friend, Neil Spencer. Neil has been called out of town, but leaves a note telling Martin to climb in the window. Martin arrives and enters as per instructions. That same night two others arrive the same way, "Second Story Pete" and Eva Warren, who is being initiated into a Bachelor Girls' Club.

Martin sees the crook and at once notifies the police. His courage then deserts him and he takes refuge in bed. Eva, dressed in man's clothing, he mistakes for an accomplice of the burglar, and being a timid man by nature, our hero seeks refuge in a bed. Eva is also frightened by one look at Pete and takes refuge in the same bed.

Then Neil returns from his trip with a policeman that Martin has telephoned for. Pete escapes, but Martin and Eva are discovered in a compromising position. To save Eva's reputation Martin says she is his wife. The girl consents, and they marry.

THE BELLE AND THE BELLHOP (Two Parts—July 20).—The cast: David "Cricket" Kelly (Pat Rooney); Selden (Jay Belasco); Bliss (H. M. Thurston); Mary McFee (Adele Farrington); General Grouch (O. C. Jackson); Col. Souse (Marc Robbins); Jack Hewlitt (Hayward Mack). Scenario by Walter Woods. Produced by Roy Clements.

David Kelly, known as "Cricket," is bell hop at one of the large metropolitan hotels. Selden is the head clerk and the bane of "Cricket's" life. Mary McFee, the cigar counter girl, is the idol of the bell hop's heart. Jack Hewlitt, a drummer, arrives at the hotel, and arouses the ire of "Cricket" because of his attentions to Mary. General Grouch, an old veteran, arrives and angrily orders the bell boys away when they try to take his luggage, but "Cricket" outwits him and takes charge of his baggage by force. In the days that pass "Cricket" does many kind services for the old man. He notes the growing interest between Mary and Jack with dismay and resolves to break off their interest in each other.

The General's nephew is staying at the hotel and is quite a "rounder." The old man finally takes sick. He refuses to have a doctor and gets worse. "Cricket" sees the old man is in bad shape and one day he stops a doctor who is calling, and asks him what he charges for a visit. The medical man tells him two dollars, and after a search, "Cricket" digs up the amount in nickels and dimes and pays him for a visit to the old grouch. The old man is touched by the boy's thoughtfulness for him. The doctor tells the General that his condition is serious and orders him sent to a hospital. Before leaving, however, he writes out a legal paper, which the doctor witnesses, and presents it to "Cricket."

"Cricket" learns that Mary and Jack are going out to supper and resolves to follow them. Jack sends him to his room for a box, containing a present for Mary, and the boy opens the box and substitutes a photo of Jack's wife and child for the present, then ties the box up. "Cricket" learns that Grouch has died, but does not think of the paper he has.

Jack has taken Mary to a cheap restaurant, where he tries to caress her. She repulses him, and thinking to placate her he opens the box supposed to contain a present for her. When Mary sees the photo she rushes out to "Cricket," who takes her home. While "Cricket" is waiting on his bench he takes out the paper. It is the will of old Grouch giving him his entire estate, which is worth millions. He goes to Mary, who has taken a great liking to him since he has rescued her, and asks her to marry him. At first she agrees but then tells him that she cannot marry a millionaire. "Cricket" pleads with her. In his pleading he drops his cigarette and the will catches fire. Mary then agrees to marry him. He hurries to the phone and getting Bliss on the line tells him to hold the job of assistant clerk for him, he having previously resigned his job. Bliss agrees, and Mary will soon be Mrs. "Cricket."

BISON.

MIDWINTER MADNESS (Two Parts—July 22).—The cast: Rosalie Lenormand (Dorothy Phillips); Jean Lenormand, her husband (Stanley Walpole); Pierre Laroux (Barrington Barringer); Olympe Thury (Nellie Slattery). Written and produced by Winthrop Kelley.

Rosalie, previous to her marriage to Jean Lenormand, had been wooed by a young trapper, Pierre Laroux. It was principally Pierre's weakness for drink that induced Rosalie to discard bim in favor of Jean. But life in Jean Lenormand's cabin is an endless round of drudgery for Rosalie. Although they are poor they are happy in the love of their child, Cecile. Jean leaves for work, and while he is gone Pierre arrives as Rosalie is chopping wood. Pierre's love is reawakened, and he resolves to win her.

Jean returns at supper time and discovers the bandanna handkerchief, which rouses his suspicions. He tries to shake off his jealousy as he enters the cabin and kisses his wife. Later, however, he is tortured by his suspicions, and seeks oblivion at the village saloon. Leaving the saloon slightly intoxicated, he encounters Pierre, whose insolent manner causes Jean to confront him with the accusing evidence of the handkerchief. They proceed to fight it out. In the melee Jean's leg is broken, and he is carried to his cabin, where Rosalie is watching at the bedside of her sick child.

On Saturday night, Olympe Thury, a shameless woman, is comforting her child, when one of her lovers enters and tells her to come to the dance hall with her child. At the cabin, Jean in anger tells his wife to go to her lover, Pierre Laroux, and obtain tbe money that is due her as the wages of sin. When she leaves she says, "I'll not be accused without cause, I'm going to Pierre Laroux. At the dance hall she finds Pierre, and whispers, "I am yours tonight, if you will take me." An infant's wail arises from a back room. Olympe, hearing her baby crying, goes into the back room to nurse it. Rosalie hears the baby's cry and realizes that she is neglecting ber sick child at home. She breaks away from Pierre and flies in agonized terror from the dance hall. He rushes after her.

A shot rings out and as Rosalie stumbles with a bullet through her forearm, she has the presence of mind to drop behind a boulder. She succeeds in reaching the river bank, where she crouches under an overhanging rock. Pierre reaches the rock with unsteady feet and in another moment there is an ominous splash. Rosalie then returns to her cabin.

Jean doesn't believe that Rosalie has taken him at his word until he hears the child crying for water. He crawls to the spring to get it and meanwhile Rosalie enters the cabin. Hearing Jean coming back, she hides behind the door. Her heart is touched by his kindness to the child and the picture fades as Rosalie and Jean embrace.

THE CRYSTAL'S WARNING (Three Parts—July 18).—The cast: Henry Chadwick (Hobart Henley); Florence Chadwick, his wife (Sydell Dowling); Madame Darak (The Sphinx) (Clara Beyers); Baron Haddad Haig and Nassib Haig (Sydney Bracey); Secretary of State (Joseph Granby).

Henry Chadwick arrives in Washington with his wife, Florence, to take up his duties in his newly-appointed post in the State Department. A mysterious woman, Madame Nadra Darak, known as The Sphinx, is the talk of all Washington. Henry meets The Sphinx, and immediately loses interest in his work and his wife. Previous to his association with The Sphinx, Henry became acquainted with Baron Haddad Haig, a high class Indian diplomat. One night wbile Henry is alone with The Sphinx Baron Haddad Haig arrives. Henry attacks the baron and is advised to leave at once by The Sphinx.

The next day Henry attacks the Baron in his club, vowing to kill him, but his friends manage to hush up the incident. That evening Henry goes, as usual, to visit The Sphinx. A face appears in at the window and The Sphinx puts out the light. It is the face of Baron Haig, but it soon disappears. She leads Henry into a vault-like room, where we see the God Visnu, and in front of the image lies an enormous ruby looking like a flaming eye. She asks Henry to take the ruby with him and keep it until she sends for it. Henry goes bome, and The Sphinx sits thinking under the spell of her Hindoo crystal. The vampire sees in the crystal that she loves Henry.

Henry arrives home, and while seated in front of the fireplace, gazes intently at the huge ruby eye. The window opens behind him and a figure slowly approaches his bent form, while a hand slowly rises over his head with a long Hindoo knife. Suddenly the figure straightens and reels backward. Henry switcbes on the lights, and sees a corpse, shot through the heart and with a red circle on one wrist.

Florence overhears a detective making a reference to a murder. She recalls that her husband's name has been associated with The Sphinx's and also knows of the rumor that after his encounter in the club, Henry bas threatened to kill the Baron. Florence hurries to the house of The Sphinx, and tells her that she is responsible for the charge of murder that has been brought against her husband. Tbe Sphinx angrily dismisses Florence. Later, after brooding over the danger that threatens her lover, The Sphinx writes a note to Florence and sends it to her by a messenger.

In the State Department tbe investigation is proceeding in regard to Henry's connection with the murder. Florence receives the note from The Sphinx and immediately returns to the bouse of mystery. She enters the Oriental room, which is in semi-darkness, and to her horror, she finds her husband's paramour lying dead on the divan. Florence starts from the room in terror. Looking back she sees a letter in the hand of the dead woman. She reads the letter and runs from the room in a daze. At the office of the Secretary of State Henry's guilt seems to have been established and be is about to sign his resignation. Suddenly the Baron Haddad enters, his clothes in rags, and his eyes betraying wild consternation. Presently he explains that it was his twin brother, Nassib Haig, who was killed. His brother bad taken one of the ruby eyes of Vishnu and given it to The Sphinx back in India.

RED FEATHER.

THE SEEKERS (Five Parts—July 17).—The cast: Rutb Heck (Flora Parker); Lem Heck (Paul Byron); Timothy Hood (Charles Mailes); John Mount (Edward Hearn). Written by Olga Printzlau. Produced by Otis Turner.

Rutb and Lem Heck are orphans. Ruth is a nurse in a small town populated by a religious sect called "The Seekers." Their object is to seek those tbat are needy and administer to their needs. Ruth and Lem live with Rev. Hood. Lem is apprentice in a machine shop. Two crooks in the machine shop rob the village bank with Lem's tools, which they stole. Lem is accused and sentenced to jail for fifteen years.

Three years pass. Rutb laments the absence of her brother, whose health is failing. Rev. Timothy Hood heeds the call of another little village of the same sect to send them a nurse and sends Ruth. She arrives at the little village of Canaan Mountain and is met by Sheriff John Mount, the son of Rev. Israel Mount, with whom she is to live. One Sabbath a drunken brute is abusing his wife at the door of tbe church. John, who is trying to aid tbe wife, ins about to be shot by the husband, when he is saved by Ruth. John and Ruth help the wife, and gain her friendship. Later the sheriff and Rutb become engaged.

Lem, the brother, is shipped out of jail by an old convict, who places him in a huge packing box which he is filling. Lem makes his escape from the baggage train and he meets Ruth in the woods. A gossip sees them in each other's arms and spreads the news that Ruth is untrue to John, her betrothed. He refuses to believe the tales. Rutb hides Lem in the barn and continues to visit him at night. John is beginning to get suspicious of her actions.

It bappens that Ruth is compelled to borrow fifty dollars from Rev. Mount, and signs a note for it, promising to work off the debt. She hies away to tbe barn and John follows her and sees her give Lem the money. He confronts them, and Rutb tells the trutb. They plead for liberty, but John's sense of duty is greater, and he starts to take Lem back. The men fight, and, as John is about to overpower Lem, Ruth strikes him over the head with an iron chain, knocking him unconscious. Ruth helps her brotber to escape, and when she returns to tbe barn she finds it in flames. She rescues John, who tells the crowd of villagers who have gathered tbat he knocked the lamp over by accident.

Several months pass. Ruth works off the debt, and the lovers are estranged. The customary time arrives to send a young couple to another part of the mountains to populate a new settlement. The couple are chosen by lottery. John is the young man chosen and Rev. Mount realizes that Ruth and John are torn with anxiety as to wbo will be the chosen wife. When the day comes the maidens cast their names in the box, and the Rev. Mount so fixes the lottery that Ruth's slip is picked. In a big city Lem is at work in a printing shop. At every sound he starts guiltily, thinking that some one will arrest him. A man rushes in with a slip of paper and tells Lem to rush it out in type for the next edition. Lem reads the paper, and it is an account of his acquittal and the full confession of the two crooks who robbed the bank. The State has pardoned his escape and only want news of his whereabouts. Lem is happy that he is at last free. Rutb and John continue on their way over the mountains in the old buggy.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE ADVENTURES OF PEG O' THE RING NO. 10 "In the Hands of the Enemy" (Two Parts—July 3).—The cast: Peg (Grace Cunard); Doctor Lund, Junior (Francis Ford); Doctor Lund, Senior (Marc Fenton); Mrs. Lund (Jean Hathaway); Flip, the Clown (Pete Gerald); Marcus, the Hindoo (Irving Lippner).

Doctor Lund arrives at the Mexican town only to find that Peg has been spirited away by Mrs. Lund's ruffians. When Flip tells him of Peg's disappearance, he seizes a horse and rides after the kidnappers. He overtakes them and succeeds in snatching Peg from the ruffian who is carrying her on his saddle. He turns and gallops with her safely across the Mexican border and on to American soil. They come up with a patrol of American troops, who at once set out to rescue the Americans in the town. Doctor Lund wishes to go with them, but Peg will not hear of it.

The circus also returns from across the border, and Peg rejoins her friends. Flip has a surprise for her. It is a beautiful race horse. She is overjoyed and they decide to enter the horse in the coming races at Tia Juana. Mrs. Lund has entered her own horse in the same race, in a desperate effort to obtain money for her schemes, and Peg and Flip are determined to beat her. "Lucille," Peg's horse, is a Kentucky thoroughbred of great reputation

Doctor Lund, Jr., invites Peg to his home to visit his mother. Peg is unwilling to go, but she does not wish to tell the doctor what she knows about his mother and rather than arouse his suspicions, she consents to go. Soon after their arrival the two bicycle cops who arrested Peg for speeding, and to whom she gave the letter, come to deliver it to her again. They are just about to hand it to Mrs. Lund when the young doctor appears and takes charge of it. This is the letter which has been stolen from Flip and which both factions wish to possess. When Peg enters, the doctor offers her the letter, but she begs him to take charge of it, as she has no pockets in her gown. Frank is called away and asks Peg to stay with his mother until he returns.

Peg wanders out into the garden, and while she is gone Mrs. Lund calls Marcus and his accomplice and lays another trap for her. She says that they can tell Frank that she has been called away. Mrs. Lund takes Peg up to the attic under pretense of showing her something, and they lock her in there. Then Mrs. Lund tells the two men that Lucile, the horse, is being shipped to Tia Juana and that they are to get it out of the way.

Peg manages to escape from the attic by breaking the skylight and scrambling down the branches of a tree which overhangs the roof. She takes Frank's auto and runs away with it to rejoin the circus. Marcus and his men have in the meantime come up with the train to which the car containing Peg's horse is attached. They succeed in uncoupling this car. Peg, in her flight, runs beside the railroad track. She sees the freight car running wild. It is about to crash into a coming train, which, to her horror, she recognizes as the circus train. She leaps from the auto, clambers up the side of the car, and puts on the brakes just in time to avert a collision.

Peg and Flip arrive at Tia Juana for the race. Mrs. Lund is there determined to spoil Peg's chances. She and her men find it impossible to dope the horse, as Peg catches them at it and, firing at Marcus, hits the bottle of dope out of his hand. They determine to get the jockey. In this they are successful. Mrs. Lund has told her men to bet heavily against Peg's horse and has done so herself. Just before the race is called her men overcome the jockey and injure him. Peg sees that Lucile is not in the line-up. She runs to the jockeys' quarters and finds her boy too hurt to ride. She rushes out to the judge's stand and informs them of the injury, asking for time as she wants to ride her horse herself. They consent, and she dresses for the race in the jockey's clothes. She wins "by a neck" and is carried to quarters on the shoulders of the crowd. She is about to resume her own clothes when Marcus and his man break in and seize her once more. They throw her into an automobile and rush away from the race track with her.

LAEMMLE.

THE GARDEN OF SHADOWS (Two Parts—July 19).—The cast: The Mother (Mary Fuller); The Father (Niles Welsh); The Child (Violet Axtell). Written by Olga Printzlaw. Produced by Lucius Henderson.

The father is busy with his business. The little child is neglected as the mother is occupied in romantic speculations. And then enters the "friend," who sees his opportunity. One evening when the father is detained on business the wife accepts the "friend's" invitation to theatre. The father returns and finds his wife gone. When the child tells where the mother is he realizes that her love has flown, and the next morning he arranges for a separation.

A year passes and the mother and child are living together, lonely. The "friend" sends her roses and says he is coming that night to claim his love. While dressing, the mother accidentally finds a white rose that her husband gave her a year before, on their wedding anniversary. Memories come back to her, but she disregards them and rushes into the garden to meet her friend.

The child being alone and frightened goes to find its mother in the garden. The child picks a white rose and approaches with it. This brings the mother to her senses and she rushes back to the house with her baby. The baby then takes sick from exposure. The father is sent for, but before he arrives the baby dies. The mother and father are reconciled by their common grief. In the garden the mother sees a vision of her child, which she follows to the house. Here they find that the child is still alive, and so the family is happily reunited.

A SOCIAL SLAVE (July 22).—The cast: The Man (G. Raymond Nye); The Girl (Roberta Wilson); The Man's Wife (Jessie Arnold); The Idler (W. J. Hageman); The Roue (Frank McQuarrie). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

The man is married to a woman whose entire time is spent in having a good time socially. The climax comes when the wife tells her husband to have dinner at the club, as she is entertaining, and the husband tells her that, as she cares for society more than she does for him, the best course for her is to get a divorce. She replies that she intends to live her life to suit herself and that a divorce is not her intention.

After a quarrel with his wife, the man realizes that there is no love between them. The man's stenographer, who is a quiet girl and who secretly loves her employer, sees the struggle in his face and is unable to hide her own love for him. The man, too, is in love with her and has a hard battle to keep from avowing his love, but his honor triumphs. He decides his only course is to leave and try to forget. The man accordingly writes a note to the girl stating that he can no longer contain his love for her, so is leaving. His honor forbids him to divorce his wife.

The Idler and the Roue are two of the wife's most frequent callers and either one or the other can be found in her society at every function. The husband returns home and packs for a long trip. Arriving at the station, the man remembers leaving a picture of the girl, and on learning that the train is late, determines to return home to get it.

The wife, meanwhile, has received the Idler and is entertaining him in the reception room. The husband arrives and the husband gets the picture. Hearing voices in the parlor he looks in and finds his wife in the Idler's arms. He calls the valet to see the action and, leaving a note for the wife with the valet, leaves without having been seen. The girl has received the note and breaks down sobbing. The man comes in and comes to her. Her joy is so great on seeing him that he starts to embrace her, then thinks and takes only her hands. He tells her that some day their hour of happiness will come.

HIS OWN STORY (July 20).—King Baggot (By Himself); Bill Harding (William Bailey); Mag (Jane Courtney). Written and produced by George A. Lessey.

While at the Screen Club one day, Dan Clayton, a moving picture director, offers $50 for a good one-reel story. It is suggested that King Baggot repeat the story of his own experience that he told the previous evening. Mr. Baggot consents and the story is visualized on the screen.

King and his friend, Bill Harding, are struggling with smugglers on a deserted island, somewhere near the northern coast of Canada. They are overpowered and locked in a hut. Mag, a girl whom the smugglers have captured and made their drudge, decides to help them.

Mag proceeds to dig a hole in the rear of the hut. King and Bil hear a grating sound and ascertain that some one has started to dig them out. Accordingly, they begin digging from their end, and the secret passage is completed in short order. Mag assists the captives to crawl out, and takes council with them as to how they can make their joint escape. The men tackle the sleeping guard and after knocking him senseless, overpower and bind the smuggler who has been left in charge of the smugglers' headquarters.

Meanwhile they sight a ship in the distance and signal it with an improvised flag. A boat is lowered from the ship and is sent to rescue them. It turns out that the ship they have signaled is an American yacht that was fitted out for the express purpose of going in search of King and Bill.

King, Bill and Mag are rowed toward the yacht, and after they have been hoisted on board the Captain tells King that he had almost given him up for lost. King explains that he and Bill had been shipwrecked and held captive by the smugglers, and is overjoyed that the yacht has arrived in time to save them from their peril, and also to rescue the girl who risked her life in coming to their assistance.

In the next scene we see Clayton handing Mr. Baggot a check for $50, declaring that the adventure ought to prove very effective when thrown on the screen.

POWERS.

DR. DORSEY'S TRAVEL PICTURES—IMPERIAL INDIA, No. 2—"THE DEVIL DANCERS OF INDIA" (July 20).

First, tame monkeys of India are shown. Wild boars are also thrown on the screen, the most fearless animals in existence. We see them feeding.

Next, we see the Devil dancers. They are mystic men who, by their dancing, drive away the evil spirits. The Todas, a poor hill tribe, are a remnant of pre-Aryan India. They have a peculiar marriage plan. Each woman has several husbands, so fatherhood is indeterminate. Their houses are relics of former days. Certain of the Toda buffalo are sacred and are worshipped by the people.

Lastly, we see the most beautiful building in the world, the tomb built by a Mogul emperor for his wife. It cost twenty million dollars and is inlaid with many precious stones and covered with costly carving.

LEE BLOUNT GOES HOME (Two Parts—July 21).—The cast: Lee Blount (Herbert Rawlinson); Billy-Lo (William Quinn); The Warden (William Canfield); Jane (Agnes Vernon).

Lee Blount is serving a life sentence for a crime. He has just received a letter from his wife telling of her struggle against starvation. She does not complain for her own, but for their child's sake. She pleads for some kind of help. She also tells Lee that Billy-Lo, a supposed friend of the family, has been calling at the house frequently. As Lee reads the letter, the incidents leading up to his arrest come back to him.

Billy-Lo, an old pal of Lee's, who has gone wrong, is often importuned by Lee to live a better life. One day Billy-Lo shoots a policeman and while escaping runs into Lee. Lee is upbraiding him for some misdeeds, when the policemen hurry on. While they are talking Billy has slipped the revolver with which he shot the policeman into Lee's pocket, and so causes Lee's conviction. Lee sinks on his cot, and examines a file which he has hidden.

The next day Billy-Lo reads of Lee's escape and notices the offer of five hundred dollars' reward for his capture. Billy knows where to find Lee and sneaks to the latter's home. Lee, meanwhile, has managed to reach his home and orders his wife to prepare to flee with him.

Billy comes, and Lee hides in the closet. Lee's wife tells Billy her husband is not there. But just as he starts to leave he notices Lee's hat, and drawing his gun orders Lee to come out. There is a fight. Billy is knocked out and Lee throws him into the closet.

Lee, learning of the reward for his capture, tells his wife that he could never escape. He forces her to 'phone the officers that she has captured Lee Blount. The officers arrive and he is taken in charge. The wife is given the money and just as they start to leave the child opens the door and Billy-Lo is discovered. Billy has died from the fight and the officers take both Lee and his wife. But it was all only a dream. The warden enters to tell Lee that Billy has confessed and he is free.

L-KO.

A BOLD BAD BREEZE (July 19).—The cast: Lazybones (Billie Ritchie); The Husband (Bill Bevan); The Wife (Lucile Hutton).

Lazybones loved to sleep and smoke but most of all he loved his neighbor's wife. Loving a neighbor's wife is all right if you do not persist in being caught by her hubby, or forcing your attentions on her when she does not want you. Lucile wanted to do the right thing, but circumstances seemed against her. Hubby was a very jealous old man, and whenever he caught his wife talking to another man the blood boiled in his veins and he wanted to murder.

Fate decreed that wifey should be placed in a peculiar circumstance, which almost verged on a tragedy, and Lazybones was the only one at hand to rescue her. But rescue was hardly made when hubby appeared on the scene and demanded an explanation. Hubby wanted to murder. The chase was terrible, over the roofs, up and down elevators. Lazybones was finally caught in a little house on the roof and hubby decided that he would end it all by shoving said little house over the edge to the hard street below. Lazybones, however, would not die alone and dragged hubby into the little house just as it was toppling over the edge, so wifey was left minus a husband.

SPRING FEVER (July 23).—The cast: A Poor Poet (Billy Armstrong); His Rival (Phil Dunham); The Girl (Gertrude Selby).

They are rivals for the love of a girl of mere acquaintance. One was a poor poet, the other a haphazard nincompoop. The poet became peeved and nonchalantly chucked his rival into the park pond. The girl ran away and the rivals met again, but this time the wet one was determined to fight and Mr. Poet was forced to defend himself.

He was being hard pressed when a little miss from nowhere stepped in and separated them and threw the wet one back into the pond. A park bird saw and decided that the poet had no right to so sweet a girl and so the poor poet fell out of the frying pan into the fire. They had a duel, which resulted in the most exciting and surprising manner imaginable. To get the full humor, this is impossible from mere words, so why continue?

JOKER.

SHE WAS SOME VAMPIRE (July 22).—The cast: The Vampire (Gale Henry); The Discarded Lover (Milburn Moranti); Heinie (Charles Conklin); Detective Binks (William Franey); His Wife (Lilian Peacock). Written and produced by Allen Curtis.

Sbe was a beach vampire. Moranti, one of her discarded lovers, sells pencils and shoestrings for a living, and another of her lovers is the owner of a peanut stand. Moranti finds his lovely ideal on the beach one day and pleads with her to accept his love, but she flouts him and goes to the stand of Heinie, and while he makes love to her she eats his peanuts.

Detective Binks has a wife and two children, but is inclined to flirt. He is taking his two kids out for an airing and they beg for peanuts. He comes up to the stand and, pulling out a large roll of bils, starts to get them a sack. The vampire sees the roll and sets her cap for him at once. Binks is not so bashful, either.

He and the vamp. find a deserted spot on the beach and sit beside a boat. While the kids are playing in the sand the vampire uses all her arts on Binks. They make a date for the next day, which the little Binks overhear. Heinie and Moranti see the vampire's fresh prey and resolve to revenge themselves. They plot dire things.

Next day, as the appointed hour draws near, Binks prepares to meet the vampire. His wife notices his indifference to her, and after Binks leaves she learns from the children that father has a date to meet a woman on the beach. She dresses in her best and sets out for the scene of activity.

Lillian is parading the beach and the two ex-lovers, mistaking her, rush her to a nearby boat. They row out to the sea and dump her overboard, believing they have forever rid the world of a wicked woman. One of the children has seen the abduction, and rescues his mother. He takes her to where the appointment was made and Binks and the vampire are found. The vampire is unmasked and all is serene.

THE PHONE MESSAGE (July 21).—The cast: Dr. Carson (Allen Holubar); Daphne (Ruth Stonehouse); Laurelton (Jack Holt).

Dr. Carson had long wooed Daphne Standing, and at last they are married. There was one among the guests who did not wish them happiness and that was Laurelton, the rejected suitor. Daphne and her husband go to their home.

Laurelton's jealousy grows, and after drinking a great deal of liquor he resolves upon a desperate scheme. That night when Carson and his bride are talking over their future the phone rings and Carson is requested to hurry to his office as there has been an accident and he is badly needed. Hardly has he disappeared when Laurelton enters the apartment. Daphne fears him and takes refuge in a locked room. The man starts to break in the door. Carson arrives at his office and finds no one there but the porter.

Daphne gets to the phone, and calling up the office, tells her husband to come quick. Laurelton has now broken in the door. She takes refuge in another locked room, but Laurelton again is pounding on the door. Carson rushes home and finds Laurelton trying to break into his wife's room. They have a fight. Police, hearing the disturbance, enter, and finally the two are separated. Daphne, in fear of her life, grabs up a revolver and when her husband opens the door, believing he is Laurelton, shoots him. He is only slightly hurt, however, and after explanations are given, the officers take Laurelton in charge.

BRANSCOMBE'S PAL (Two Parts—July 23). Written by Bannister Merwin. Produced by Harold Shaw.

Bob Caerlon has run into debt. When his father refuses to help him his sister, Helen, offers to sell her jewelry to pay his bills, but she cannot give him enough. Helen loves Bob's chum, Jack Branscombe. Jack agrees to help Bob for his sister's sake. He takes Bob to his apartment and there indorses Bob's note for $4,000, payable in four months' time. Bob leaves for the club to celebrate with Payne, another suitor for Helen's hand.

Helen in a note asks Jack to come over that evening, and he replies that he will. On his way he stops at the club to get his mail. He meets Bob and Payne, and Jack sends a note to Helen saying that he is detained. When Helen finds that Jack is there, she is angry and writes that all is over between them. Bob loses heavily and cheats in order to recoup his fortunes. Bob is accused of cheating. Just then Jack receives Helen's note and is so disgusted with it all that he says he is the one who has cheated. In his apartments Jack is consoled by his dog, Nick. Bob follows him home to tell him how sorry he is for what has happened. Jack agrees not to disgrace his name and advises him to go to Canada.

Several months later the note which Jack indorsed comes due and Jack, in order to pay it, is forced to move into less expensive apartments and write for his living. A year later he receives a letter from Bob saying that he has struck it rich and is coming home to make amends. Jack falls asleep with Bob's letter in his band and while asleep calls out Helen's name. Nick hears the name and thinks his master wants him to carry the letter to Helen. So he seizes the letter in his mouth and runs with it to Helen's house. Helen is glad to hear the truth of what actually happened on the fatal night, especially as she was about to marry Payne. Bob returns and is welcomed by all. It only remains for Nick to lead the way to Jack and all is serene.

TWO SLIPS AND A MISS (July 12).—The cast: Noah Goode (John Sheehan); Mrs. Goode (Carol Halloway); Trip Murray (John Stepling); Midgi Lightoe (Meta Drinkwitz).

Noah Goode, clubman when his wife wasn't around, had become acquainted with Midgi Lightoe, an actress. Mrs. Goode wondered where hubby spent his evenings and his twenty-five a week. She resolved to find out. The best bureau of information, and she didn't know it, was her husband's own bookkeeper, who had grown seedy in the service only to bump into Midgi and have her acquire all his worldly goods. Then she had cast him aside for his boss. But Tripp Murray was on the job and had long ago sworn vengeance.

Mrs. Goode had decided to go to his office and force her husband to take her to lunch. She arrived just after Noah left. Tripp knew where they were going and pointed to a cab below. Mrs. Goode requested that Tripp join the party. They entered a cab and started after Noah. Unknown to them, Noah had seen them first, and they did not see him when he stepped from the cab into an adjoining automobile. They followed the cab, and when it came to a stop they were surprised to find it empty.

Noah started with Midgi for the beach. Then the rush for the dressing room, the costume change, and a dive into the tank. Noah disguised himself with a nice little rubber cap which he pulled down over his ears. Midgi was disguised in a most attractive bathing suit. When wife appeared in the spectators' gallery with Tripp he pointed out the couple to her. She decided to don a bathing suit and cope with the culprits. But Noah knew what was coming and he took Midgi and made a rush for the beach.

Mrs. Goode signed her John Henry on the slip of paper at the valuable-desk. Tripp had an object of his own, especially when he pocketed the slip with Mrs. Goode's name on it. Mrs. Goode was in a hurry so wrote another one. Tripp told her he would meet her later. Tripp met Midgi and the ensuing conversation impressed him with the fact that Midgi was after Noah's money—not after his affections. Tripp gave Midgi the little identification slip he had "copped" at the valuable-desk and told her to get the swag and they would make a getaway. Tripp wandered about while Midgi went out to stall Noah, who had found some good-looking girls and was cavorting in the water with them. Midgi took refuge under the large umbrella and waited for Noah to return. Instead of Noah, however, came Mrs. Goode, who had decided to face Midgi. Midgi insisted that she didn't know that Noah was married, and to prove that he was chasing her she offered to change bathing suits with Mrs. Goode. They changed. Mrs. Goode decided to wait, but Midgi rushed away.

In the bath house she met Tripp, and it was an easy matter for them to substitute Mrs. Goode's identification slip for Midgi's. The attendant "fell" and turned over Mrs. Goode's valuables. Mrs. Goode, in the meantime, had landed her hubby and demanded him to get dressed and start for home. When they arrived at the valuables' desk they discovered that Mrs. Goode's stuff was gone. They discovered Tripp and Midgi about to make their getaway in a machine. They chartered another one, and so started an exciting chase. Midgi forgot herself in the excitement and let drop the purse with Mrs. Goode's stuff in it. It fell in the path of the coming machine, and the pin of a brooch pierced the tire. When Noah, looking to see the damage, discovered the purse with the jewels sticking in the tire he smiled—then Mrs. Goode smiled. When Noah called Midgi a thief and a worthless thing, Mrs. Goode was satisfied and embraced her hubby, who promised "Never again!"

THE RUMMY ACT OF OMAR K. M. (July 16).—The cast: Omar K. M. (Oral Humphrey); Mrs. K. M. (Jo Taylor); Little K. M. (Leo Banks); Thou (Margaret Nichols); Chariot Driver (Joe Massey).

The fact that a man reads The Rubaiyat of Omar Kayem may entitle him to a place in the Inner Circle of the Highbrow, but the fact that Omar Kayem read the Rubaiyat did not please his wife so she waylaid with a broom handle and precipitated him into the sphere of the Persians.

to the vision of Omar the dancing "Thou" who flirted with the old chap and urged him on. So Omar made her acquaintance, and she suggested a stroll into the woods. Omar was more than willing, but went her one better and urged "a book of verses, a jug of wine, a loaf of bread" and "Thou." So, Omar betook himself to the winery, bought the nectar and told the clerk to take the cash and let the credit go, that his wife would not ask for an explanation when the monthly credit slips came in. Then Omar and "Thou" went out for their little party. Omar rented a chariot that they might ride in splendor.

Mrs. K. M. needed her helpful husband, and when she noticed that the old chap was gone, she did a little investigating. To the winery she went, and by dire threats forced the clerk to tell her that her spouse had bought wine for a "chicken." Omar's chariot was stuck in the mud, and its driver could not budge it. Things looked bad, but Omar realized that "tender green might move him from the river lip upon which they did lean," so the old sport kicked in with a few "greens" and the chariot drew like a tractor. And to a cottage in the woods did Omar go, where he told the sweet "Thou" how much he loved her company.

Mrs. K. M., while looking for Omar, came across the chariot driver, who was washing the mud from the wheels. A short conversation gave Mrs. K. M. the information she wanted, and the chariot was pressed into service for Mrs. K. M.'s advent at the cottage in the woods. And while Omar whispered sweet nothings to "Thou," Mrs. K. M. was trying to get into the cottage. But "There was the door to which she found no key, and there was the veil thru which she could not see!" But she did find an opening in the rear of the cottage, and through this opening she crawled. Omar was right in the midst of a wonderful outburst when she burst in and the wine jug was hurled at his head. Omar was covered with the wet stuff—but it brought him to—in his own back yard, where a blow from a broomstick had set him back ages! And as Mrs. K. M. dragged him away he made no secret of his mismating and advised that "when we reach the spot where he made One,—we turn down an empty glass!'

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE.

THE DECOY (Five Parts—June 29).—The cast: Glory Moore (Frances Nelson); Harvey Dix (Gladden James); Mrs. Lawrence (Leonore Harris); Jim Danvers (Robert W. Frazer); Milt Bannon (Frank Beamish).

Glory Moore, a young girl, finds herself left unprovided for after her father's death, as the farm has to be sold to pay his debts. She writes to her aunt in New York, asking for help in obtaining employment in the city. The aunt, Mrs. Lawrence, is in reality an adventuress, and accomplice of two card sharps and confidence men, Milt Bannon and Harvey Dix. They decide to bring Glory to the city in order to use her as a decoy in fleecing rich young men.

Jim Danvers, a rich young fellow who is going the pace, is one of their victims. The unsuspecting Glory believes she has found a loving aunt and a luxurious home, and is for a time deceived. She finally realizes the truth. She exposes the swindlers in a card game in which they are cheating Jim. Mrs. Lawrence, infuriated, locks Glory in her room. Glory, in wild panic, escapes through the window, climbs a fire-escape, wanders over adjacent roofs and accidentally falls through a skylight into an apartment which proves to be Jim's.

Jim, who has fallen in love with Glory, befriends her, but Dix's appearance, while Jim is absent, frightens Glory and she runs away. She hires a furnished room and advertises for employment. She is followed by Bannon, who, by means of a decoy letter, brings her to his bachelor apartment.

Meantime Dix and Mrs. Lawrence have quarreled with Bannon over the division of their spoils. Dix threatens revenge; Bannon in turn, threatens to expose. Dix is an escaped convict. While Glory is denouncing Bannon for having tricked her to his rooms, Dix shoots Bannon through the window and escapes. By a combination of circumstances Jim and Glory are accused of the crime, taken to police headquarters, and put through the "third degree." Then both are separately released to further the plans of the police. Glory suspects Dix, but is not sure of it. She entices Dix into Jim's rooms and pretends to be in love with him. She is about to obtain a confession from him when Jim bursts in and denounces her. Glory is unable to reassure Jim of her love for him, as this will prevent Dix's confession.

Accordingly she drives him away, admitting her love for Dix. Dix confesses. Glory then tells him it was all a trick on her part to save Jim and find the real murderer. Dix resolves to silence her forever. He attacks her. The room is wrecked. But just as he is about to kill her, Jim arrives with the police inspector. Glory accuses Dix. Dix jumps from the window and is killed by the fall into the court below. Glory and Jim are united.

DUST (American—Five Parts—July 10).—The cast: Frank Kenyon (Franklyn Ritchie); John D. Moore, Marian's Father (Harry Von Meter); Bud (William Marshall); Marian Moore (Winnifred Greenwood); Mina (Margaret Nichols); Mina's Mother (Louise Lester).

Marion Moore's sweetheart, Frank Kenyon, a young author interested in social reform, discovering that Marion's father is the owner of the worst factory in the city, pleads with her to persuade him to make better working conditions. Marion refuses. The season's society event is an entertainment for the benefit of the Belgian War Victims. Marian is to play "Humanity." That day, Mina, a child working in the factory, has her hand mangled in a machine. Frank learns of the accident from Bud and determines to bring the lesson home to Marian. He bribes her chauffeur to drive Marian to Mina's home. Marian is forced to enter the house with him.

They find Mina alone and almost unconscious from an overdose of an opiate. The only hope of saving the child is by keeping her awake until he can summon medical aid. He orders Marian to walk the girl until he returns. Then he dashes away in the machine. Marian, seeing another machine approaching, leaves the child, and persuades the owner to drive her to the entertainment. When Frank returns, Mina is past saving. Wild with rage, he sets out for the entertainment. Marian has just achieved a great success when he arrives. He creates a sensation by mounting the platform and scathingly denouncing the shallow society people before him. Marian later hands Lim hack his ring.

He drives her by force to Mina's home. Marian is taken aback when she discovers that the animal mother is not weeping for love of Mina, but she wonders how she will ever pay for a cheap piano now that Mina's wages will no longer he forthcoming. Marian promises to attend to the payments. Marian laughs scornfully at Frank. Frank determines to wage a relentless war against Moore until conditions are modified. As champion of the working people, he is elected to the legislature. Frank introduces his bill for better factories. After much excitement, it is passed. Since the accident to Mina, Bud has been working to perfect a number of safety devices. With the idea of cheating the boy, Moore goes with him to a cabinet at one end of the building to look them over. Meanwhile a blaze has started. Soon the flimsy structure is ablaze. Marian escapes with the girls, but Moore and Bud are trapped in the cabinet.

From the roof of an adjoining building Frank throws a rope to the factory, where it fastens around a cornice. Then he makes his way hand over hand across the rope to the burning building, breaks through a skylight, and lowers a rope to Bud. Moore shoves the boy aside. Frank, angered, lowers the rope again for Bud. Moore rushes to the edge of the building. But as he hangs midway, the flames reach the rope, and he plunges to his death. A few weeks later the newspapers announce large gifts to charity from an anonymous source. Through Bud he discovers that it is Marian. The picture closes as she agrees to face the future with him.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE (Chapter 9—Two Parts—July 17).—Escaping death in the Arbor Cafe earthquake, Cleo and Hope examine the book. In it Cleo finds a prescription which Dr. Owen left there. Olga and Morton see this and think she has found the secret of the submarine. They follow Cleo and Hope. En route to San Francisco, Olga and Morton lose track of Cleo and Hope, but Mahlin and Satsuma are close on their heels. Olga and Morton meet Smith, an aviator who taught Morton how to fly an aeroplane. While waiting for Hope to recover from a slight injury received in the earthquake, Cleo and Hope attend an aviation meet. They see Smith make a flight with a fellow passenger, the latter descending in a parachute.

Cleo and Hook are seen by Olga and Morton. On the way back from the aviation meet, Cleo is kidnapped by Olga and Morton when Hook strolls away to buy a newspaper. They demand that she divulge the secret of the submarine. She tells them the paper she found in the book was a prescription. They refuse to believe her. Hope and Hook make a desperate but ineffectual search for Cleo. That night Morton steals Smith's aeroplane and starts across the mountains with Cleo to take her to his hunting cabin. When over the mountain, Cleo suddenly grabs the parachute and descends to earth. She is quickly followed by Morton in the aeroplane. They have landed on a mountain where Dick Patten, a recluse, has a cabin.

Morton finds a letter which tells him Patten will be away for two weeks. The only means of access to the mountain is in a basket over a cable that crosses a chasm. Morton tells Cleo she must remain here until she will consent to reveal the secret of the submarine. He tells her he will return the following day. In the morning Cleo makes a small parachute of her handkerchief and sends a note flying down from the mountain in hopes someone will find it. It is found by two boys, who turn it over to their mother. The mother goes to the hotel to take the note to Lieut. Hope. Mahlin and Satsuma get the note from the women and are reading it when Hope comes in. He grabs the note and they flee. Hope and Hook start for the cabin on the mountain. Mahlin and Satsuma are also en route. Aviator Smith has notified the police of the loss of his machine. Morton with Olga in the aeroplane starts for the mountain again to demand that Cleo divulge the secret of the submarine.

Aviator Smith and a squad of motor cycle police trail Morton. Hope arrives at one side of the chasm and sees Cleo on the opposite side of the cable. Hook is toiling up the mountain side some distance below. Hope starts to cross the cable hand over hand. When he reaches the center, Mahlin and Satsuma run up. Mahlin grabs an axe and cuts the cable as Cleo looks on in helpless horror.

"NEWMAN"

BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMANS?"

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

Our new 1916 catalog will be sent to you for the asking—get one quick.

GAUMONT.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 40 "Yellowstone Park" (June 14).—Some of the most memorable views of Yellowstone Park ever taken are presented in this issue of "See America First." The paint post, world famous geysers, the two great falls, the lake and the canon and mountains and the picturesque hotels have been photographed for Mutual followers in all their grandeur.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 42 "Glacier National Park" (June 28).—Glacier National Park, in Montana, which, according to many tourists is equal in picturesqueness and in interest to Yellowstone, is the subject of this instructive release of "See America First."

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 43 "Mobile, Ala." (July 5).—All the old-world charm that makes New Orleans such a fascinating city to visitors has been preserved in this series of pictures of the Crescent City. The Cabildo, the state building erected under Spanish rule, was the scene of the transfer of the Province of Louisiana from France to the United States in 1803. On the same square is St. Louis Cathedral, erected in 1794. Since the French market is known all over the world, it appropriately has a place in these pictures, as has Metairie Cemetery, one of the most beautiful burial places in the world.

REEL LIFE NO. 9 "Spinning Wool" (July 2).—Until it is flashed upon the screen in "Reel Life No. 9," but few people will know that the spinning of wool as a home industry is not a lost art of America. On a tour in the South recently, a Gaumont-Mutual cameraman stumbled by accident into a mountainous section of Georgia, where he was surprised to find that the women of the families, and in many instances the children, were engaged in the carding, spinning and weaving of wool for home use. The entire industry is depicted, starting with the shearing of the sheep and following along until the cleaned wool reaches the hands of the motherly old woman who before the camera, goes through all the processes of weaving into cloth.

Interesting indeed are the pictures of ancient Egypt shown in this issue. They carry the spectator to the Pyramids, into the ancient tombs and scores of other places well known to the followers of Egyptian history. Other interesting pictures show the ruins of the Temple of Phtah, the Temple of Karnak, 1,200 feet long and 300 feet wide, and the ruins of the historic Temple of Ammon, the largest in Egypt. A continuation of the ever popular Gaumont animal studies are also presented in this release, with bird life as an additional feature.

REEL LIFE, NO. 10 "Teaching the Blind to Become Useful" (July 9).—Methods pursued by the New York Association for the Blind, in preparing the sightless to become economically independent, are included in the interesting pictures presented in the tenth issue of Reel Life. These exceptional pictures, taken under the auspices of the authorities of the various institutions maintained by the Association, show the blind being taught the various trades to which, after a period of observation on the part of the instructors, it was thought they were best adapted.

The inmates are shown weaving baskets, caning chairs and even more interesting, operating a typewriter, at which no few of these sightless young men and women have become quite proficient.

This release of Reel Life also carries the spectators into the anthracite mining centers of Pennsylvania, showing how the coal is mined, screened and shipped.

GATES OF DIVORCE (Three Parts—July 20).—The cast: John Hammer (Alexander Gaden); Ruth, His Wife (Gertrude McCoy); Mrs. Plynn (Iva Shepard); Lucy West (Lucille Taft); Her Mother (Mathilde Baring); Bob Colfax (John Reinhard). Written by Robert Burns. Directed by Edwin Middleton.

John Hammer is disappointed in his young wife because she devotes her entire time to frivolous affairs. By his own efforts, Hammer is a millionaire at thirty-five. His wife, a dainty creature with more on the outside of her head than on the inside, has not grown in character with her husband's growth. She lav-ishes all her affection on a Pomeranian dog. The time comes when Hammer rebels against her heartless disregard of his interests. After a scene in which he snatches the dog away from his wife, he retreats to his club. Matters appear to be drifting rapidly toward the divorce court.

Mrs. Hammer, wrapped up in her own affairs, agrees to a legal separation. To secure evidence for the divorce, Hammer has his attorney negotiate with Bob Colfax, a dapper young scoundrel of the underworld. Colfax agrees to furnish a young woman who will be found in a damaging situation with Hammer. However, the latter does not know of the part Colfax plays in the matter. Hammer calls upon the girl, an innocent appearing young girl. She tells him that she is making herself a co-respondent because she needs money desperately. Hammer is struck with her charm and innocence.

Mrs. Hammer decides to keep her hold on her husband until she is ready to marry again, and does not secure the evidence against him and Lucy West, the girl in the case. The husband wonders why it has not been his good fortune to marry such a girl as Lucy, and sincerely falls in love with her. He furnishes an apartment for her and sends for her mother. One of his first presents to her is the dog he had taken away from his wife in a moment of anger.

Driving one day, Mrs. Hammer sees the dog and traces it to Lucy's handsome apartment. Going in to make inquiries, she sees her husband's photograph on the piano. Her rage knows no hounds. She decides now to sue for divorce. This she is willing to do, since she has fallen in love herself with an attractive young man, not knowing that he is Bob Colfax. The papers learn of her affair and give it unpleasant publicity.

Hammer goes to call on Lucy, and discovers that she is preparing to give up the apartment. He sees a man disappear into a closet. Lucy denies that any one is there. Hammer then says it will he no harm to turn the gas jet under the door. Lucy rushes out, and Hammer turns off the gas, falling to the floor as if himself also overcome. Lucy returns with a revolver, finds the man she has been duping is unconscious, and drops the revolver as she rushes to open the door. Bob Colfax, her fellow-conspirator, emerges. Hammer seizes the revolver and drives the couple out. He then rushes to his home. There Ruth greets him, overcome with repentance, and they begin life anew together.

CENTAUR.

THE OSTRICH TIP (Two Parts—July 22).—The cast: William Carr (William Clifford); John Williams (Joseph Hazelton); Bessie Williams (Margaret Gibson); Judd Brown (David Allen).

William Carr, manager of an ostrich industry, receives a big order for feathers and hoas from an heiress, who selects colors of the offshade and pastil tints. The head dyer is ignorant of some of the necessary formulas, hut insists that he can act on the order successfully. The tints are not according to order, and the heiress refuses to accept the feathers. Carr sends for the most expert dyer in the world—John Williams—severely reprimanding the head dyer.

When John Williams arrives, he brings with him his daughter, Bessie. Judd Brown, the dyer, leads the other dyers in revolt. He is determined to get the formulas from the old man and when he adds an insult to the daughter he is discharged by the manager. Judd Brown then begins an active campaign of enmity and determines that he will get the formulas at any cost. He excites the other men to his way of thinking, and they go to the cottage of the old man one night to hully him into disclosing the formulas.

The old man is teaching his daughter the formulas in cipher when the men enter. He quickly tears the formulas into ribbons. This infuriates the ruffians and they drag the old man and girl to the dyeing room. In the struggle along the path, Bessie's hat with a beautiful feather, which the manager presented her, is lost. In the dye rooms the villains torture one against the other, trying to coerce the secret from Williams. Failing to get the secret, they drag the girl off, telling the father they are going to cast her into the ostrich pen, stampede the ostriches and the girl will be kicked to death.

Car has worked late that night and coming from his office he finds Bessie's hat. Knowing the insubordinate attitude of his men and the ruffian, Judd Brown, his suspicions are aroused and he goes to the dyeing rooms and sees evidence of a struggle. From a window he witnesses the outrage of Brown and the ruffians as they drag the father and daughter toward the pen. He makes all haste to the scene, rescues the girl and her father, and a struggle follows, the manager and the old man conquering Brown and his gang. The simple little English girl has wound herself around the manager's heart with her sweet way—and all ends happily.

VOGUE.

STUNG, BY GUM (July 11).—The cast: Chief of Police (Rube Miller); The Under Officer (Arthur Tavares); Farmer Brown (Henry Huckins); His Two Daughters (Madge Kirby and Alice Neice).

Rube is the chief of Police, and he is in love with Madge, one of the two daughters of a well-to-do farmer. Madge is pretty, while Alice, her sister, is a fright. Art is a member of the village force. He is in love with Madge. Madge favors Art.

Rube is very fond of raw eggs and is in the habit of taking them from the hen house of Madge's father. He complains to Rube about the loss of eggs. Rube then has an idea. He thinks that if he can get Art caught in the hen house he can get him out of the way and win Madge, so he arranges a trap on the door of the hen house, stations Art on the inside to watch for the thieves. Once Art is on the inside, Rube bolts the door and nails the window.

Alice later comes to the house to get the eggs. She springs the trap. Huckins, the farmer, comes running out of the house. Rube is on the job. Art is caught. He tries to explain; no use; he is offered the choice of marrying Alice or going to jail. Madge whispers to him; he chooses to marry Alice. On the day of the wedding Madge and Alice change clothes. Alice is married to Rube, and Madge gets the man of her choice. When Rube sees the face of his bride he faints away.

A DEEP SEA LIAR (July 16).—The cast: Bloggie (Ben Turpin); Bill (Paddy McQuire); The Agent (Arthur Moon); Rena (Rena Rogers); Admiral Shimsky (Jack Gaines).

Admiral Shimsky comes to the St. Clair Hotel to confer with Murray Sinclair, the Moth Ball Magnate, regarding the latter's invention, which affects or borders on the submarine. At the hotel, the head of the Limburger Navy is quite a social favorite. He becomes grossly interested in a certain married woman, whose husband shows his dislike of the Admiral's attentions hy showering a succession of forcible incidents in which Shimsky comes off second best.

Moon, a government agent, in love with Rena, the inventor's daughter, has unsuccessfully tried to buy the invention, and thinking to safeguard his country's interests, he employs two men to answer an ad which the hotel has inserted in a local daily. The requirements of this advertisement read and explained that the hotel needs the services of two ex-sailors to act in ship-shape order, while attending the wants of the Admiral. Moon promises these men a fortune, if, while acting as servants to the Naval Head, they can ohtain a copy of the plans of this invention.

Employed in this capacity, the bungling men finally obtain the much wanted papers, and also the wallet of Shimsky. Circumstances eventually expose the wallet as being stuffed with stage money hy Shimsky, who is denounced as a faker. He flees, and the bungling men are not long following him. This is a rapid fire, slapstick comedy, in which the complications are too involved to detail.

CUB.

JERRY'S STRATAGEM (July 21).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Father (Louis FitzRoy); Madge (Claire Alexander); Housekeeper (Janet Sully); Maid (Margaret Cullington); Sergeant (Jefferson Osborne). Written and directed by Milton Fahrney.

Jerry continues to woo the daughter of a millionaire, despite the objections of the parent. The father determines to put an end to the courting and summons the police. The presence of the policeman does not bother Jerry, hut it causes a heated argument between the father and the persistent wooer, and when the guardian of the law attempts to interfere he is knocked unconscious hy his own club, of which Jerry gains possession. Other policemen are attracted and they arrest Jerry and the millionaire.

At the jail Jerry manages to get hold of another club, and as he is about to be cast into a cell he brings the cluh down on the keeper's head and manages to escape, after locking the father in a cell. Jerry appropriates the use of a patrol wagon to himself and drives off again to woo the girl.

He comes across some men who are enjoying themselves at archery. Interested, Jerry happens to get in the way of the flying arrows and arouses the indignation of the sportsmen. They kick Jerry about and then start to fight among themselves regarding the manner of scoring the shots which struck the intruder. In the meantime Jerry grabs several bows and some arrows and escapes.

As Jerry arrives at his sweetheart's home, he sees the father coming along. Jerry drives his patrol wagon behind the house and prepares a note for the girl, which he attaches to one of the arrows. Attracting her attention hy whistling, he is about to shoot the arrow with the note to her when the father is attracted.

The millionaire starts out of the house in a hurry to get Jerry, hut he is held off by a volley of arrows. Jerry sends the note to the girl through the air, and it is a proposal of elopement. The girl makes a rope of the bed clothing, lets herself down from the second floor and with Jerry starts off in the patrol wagon for a minister.

The father telephones the police, who hurry from the station house to respond to the call, but they are astonished when they discover that their patrol wagon is gone. As they hurry to the millionaire's home by foot, Jerry and the girl are speeding away, and they make their escape along the road to happiness without further interference.

MUSTANG.

NUGGET JIM'S PARDNER (Two Parts—July 14).—The cast: Hal (Frank Borzage); Decker (Jack Farrell); Madge (Anna Little); Nugget Jim (Dick La Reno).

The son of a wealthy business man, Hal, is untouched by the hand of care. His father frequently remonstrates with him and urges him to give up his frivolous ways, but Hal laughs at him. Entirely out of patience, his father one night orders him from the house, and with but a dollar in his pockets Hal proceeds to a saloon, and ordering the drinks for the house, spends his last cent. Somewhat confused, but still carefree, he finds shelter for the night in an open box car.

Somewhere in Arizona lives Nugget Jim, a miner, who spends most of his time indulging in liquor. And after a somewhat adventurous trip across the continent, Hal arrives in this region. Being hungry, he enters Jim's cabin, and finding no one there, proceeds to cook himself a meal. Jim appears, and furiously attacks him. Then he forces Hal to come to his mine and work for the food he has stolen. Hal laughingly goes to work. And that night he comes to Jim's cabin again and tells Jim that he intends to stay with him and work his mine for him.

Madge, Jim's daughter, is an entertainer in a dance hall. Hal overhears her pleading with her father to be allowed to return home, but he refuses. Hal gets to thinking, and that night takes Madge from the dance hall and to her house. Jim is furious, and a fight ensues between the two men, but this time it is Jim who receives the beating. Hal locks him up in one of the rooms, and keeps him there until the liquor is entirely out of his system. Then he forces Jim to go to the mine and work.

Time passes. Jim has come to see the folly of his ways, and determines to make a man of himself. Then comes a letter to Hal from his father, who has located him through a detective agency, and the father begs Hal to come home to him, and that all will be forgiven. Hal concludes that he must go, but at the depot, and after he had gotten on the train, he changes his mind, and leaping from the train he goes back to the two people whose lives he has changed so much, and who have incidentally made him a worth while man.

AMERICAN.

LOVE'S BITTER STRENGTH (Two Parts—July 10).—The cast: Richard Belmont (George Field); Paula (Lizette Thorne); Mrs. Belmont (Dixie Stewart); Jas. Benton (Ed. Coxen); His Mother (Bessie Banks).

Richard Belmont and his bride, Paula, return from their honeymoon and are happily established in the Belmonts' city house. Almost immediately following this a serious accident occurs. Paula, returning from Dick's office in her high powered roadster, runs over a cliff, and the car is totally wrecked. Before anyone learns of the accident Paula partially recovers and, still somewhat dazed, crawls into an open box car near by.

Dick is almost distracted by Paula's mysterious disappearance, and a general search commences, which results in the discovery of the wrecked car, and Paula's cap beside it. He is unable to get any further trace of her. Meanwhile Paula is carried out into the country and recovers to find herself in a strange place with no recollection of who she is or where she came from. She finally finds refuge at the farmhouse of Jim Benton, who lives alone with his mother. They care for Paula until she recovers completely with the exception of regaining her memory.

Time passes, and the search instigated by Dick is given up. Meanwhile, at the farm, Jim has fallen deeply in love with Paula, who refuses to consider marriage until she learns her past. Jim leaves for the city on business with the intention of bringing a specialist back with him to examine Paula. He has business connections with Dick's firm and is taken into his home during his stay. There he learns the story of the strange disappearance of Dick's wife, and, through a painting of her, recognizes her. A struggle follows and the right prevails. Jim tells Dick of the likeness of his wife's portrait and the girl on the farm. They rush back to her, and the shock of their meeting effects Paula's cure.

QUICKSANKS OF DECEIT (Three Parts—July 13).—The cast: Ida Allen (Vivian Rich); Hugh Conway (Alfred Vosburgh); John Hardy (George Periolat); Eleanor Hardy (Queenie Rosson).

Ida Allen, an orphan, runs away from the home because of cruel treatment and is rescued by John Hardy, a gruff but kindly old farmer. The girl wins Hardy's affection by her care for him, and he adopts her, although he has a daughter about Ida's age, who has just returned from boarding school. Hardy's heart is set on marrying Eleanor to Hugh Conway, a young farmer, whose farm joins his, but she rebels, having fallen under the fascination of Paul Denny, a worthless chap, who has floated into the vicinity. Hugh is attracted to Ida, but accedes to the old man's plans.

Eleanor is persuaded to elope with Paul, and shares her secret with Ida, who is unable to dissuade her. Eleanor deceives her father to think she is returning to school. The inevitable happens. Eleanor is deserted and sends for Ida, who still keeps her secret, and cares for Eleanor and her child until Eleanor dies. Hugh finds a letter written by Paul to Eleanor which seems to account for Ida's disappearance, and Hugh and Hardy are forced to the conclusion that she has betrayed and disgraced the home. A letter addressed to Eleanor at school is returned and unclaimed, and Hugh finds that she did not return to school.

Paul is on the down grade and returns to get hush money from Hardy, threatening to tell things which will discredit his daughter. Hugh silences him and getting a clue to Ida's connection with Eleanor's tragedy, goes to search for her. Ida, struggling to care for the baby and herself, is surprised and taken home again to comfort Hardy and be protected by Hugh's love.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

A VIRGINIA ROMANCE (Quality Pictures Corporation—Two Parts—July 3).—The cast: Ralph Everly (Francis X. Bushman); Georgia Daniels (Beverly Bayne); Harry Daniels (Lester Cuneo); Mrs. Daniels (Helen Dunbar). Written by Charles A. Taylor. Directed by Charles Belmore.

The University of Virginia is a-tingle with excitement, just before the great football game between Virginia and Hillside University. Ralph Everly and Harry Daniels are valued members of the team. Ralph is in love with Georgia, Harry's sister, and has urged her to give him her answer. She tells him he shall have it after the game.

Harry has been consorting with gamblers, and they urge him to throw the game, as they are putting up money on the side of the opponents, and the betting is heavy on the home team. Just as the game begins, they send a note to Harry, on the field, offering him a thousand dollars to throw the game. By a mistake Ralph gets the note, but does not read it, as the whistle is sounded for the game to begin. The first half is played, and Virginia is victorious, the score being 3 to 0. Between the halves Harry managed to get the note from Ralph's helmet. He makes a fumble at a critical moment, and Virginia loses the game, the final score standing 7 to 3. The bystanders accuse Harry, but Ralph, for the sake of Georgia, takes the blame on his own shoulders, and says the note was sent to him. Harry is too weak to tell the truth and accept the scorn he deserves.

Ralph, thinking that Georgia will believe in him, goes for her answer, but it is a scathing "No!" He continues his senior year and graduates with the undeserved contempt of all his classmates.

Ralph goes to New York and becomes a member of the bar. His legal triumphs excite so much attention that he is invited by the District Attorney of his home town to be his assistant. His first case turns out to be the prosecution of Harry Daniels, who has never forsaken his dishonest ways and associates, and has stolen from the bank in which he is employed. Ralph proves him guilty, and Harry serves a sentence in prison.

Coming out, he is determined to be revenged on Ralph. Georgia discovers his intention, and goes to warn Ralph. It is the first time the two have met face to face since the day of the game. Even while she is warning him, Harry comes to attempt his life, and Ralph denounces him, for the first time telling Georgia the truth about the football game. He shows his magnanimity by giving Harry a chance to redeem himself. Young Daniels leaves to begin life over again under happier conditions, and Ralph and Georgia take up their Virginia romance where they had left it so long ago.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE GRASP OF GREED (Five Parts—July 17).—The cast: John Meeson (C. N. Hammond); Eustace, his Nephew (Jay Belasco); Alice Gordon (Louise Lovely); Lady Holmhurst (Gretchen Lederer); Jimmie (Lon Chaney). Written by Ida May Park. Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

Alice Gordon, a rising young authoress, has sold to the firm of Meeson & Co. the rights to her works. The contract is made before one of her books has reached such great popularity that her reputation is made and her fortune assured. Alice has an invalid sister dependent upon her for support and when a sudden change comes in the sick girl's condition, it is necessary for Alice to raise money immediately.

Going to John Meeson, she is gruffly told by the old miser that her contract clearly stipulates under what terms she could get money and how much she could get. Meeson has a nephew, his only heir. The young man enters the office while Alice is discussing money matters with the miserly old publisher.

When Alice has departed, the nephew engages his uncle in an exciting argument, and finally the boy tears up the contract which Alice has made with Meeson & Co., because it was so unjust to the girl. This incident so embitters the miserly old Meeson that he draws a new will, leaving his entire fortune to his partners in business.

Meeson's nephew has been rather smitten with Alice and spends his time trying to find the girl at her home address. When he finally manages to see her and explains what he has done, she expresses her sincere gratitude. Alice tells him that she will go to Australia, where a rival publishing concern has made her a tempting offer for her future literary efforts.

Meanwhile the invalid sister has died and Alice sails for Australia. Meeson learns of the offer and sails on the same ship with the intention of buying out the Australian publishing house. The ship bearing Alice and old Meeson is wrecked. Old Meeson, in an attempt to save his skin, when he is not allowed to take his place in the first boats among the women and children, jumps overboard. Alice prevails upon the sailors who man the boat she is in to haul the old miser aboard.

The party is finally cast away on a desert island. Old age and the severity of his experience brings Meeson close to death, and his conscience smites him. He would now gladly change his will, but there is no parchment or writing materials with which he may record his last testament. One of the sailors is an experienced tattoo artist and a plan is finally devised that the will of Meeson shall be tattooed with a sharp fish bone upon the back of a little boy who is among the castaways. The black fluid contained in the sack of a cuttle fish is to supply the ink.

When it comes to the actual performance of tattooing, the girl objects to the little boy being made the victim and renders her own back as the parchment upon which the will shall be written. Eventually the castaways are rescued. Alice and the little boy are safely returned to London, where they arrive at about the time Meeson's will is being probated in favor of his business partners.

Alice enters court at a critical moment and offers Meeson's last will in evidence. The dignified judges examine the document and pass the will around the court room for scrutiny. They finally admit that the strange documents is the last valid and legal will of the late John Meeson. The happy ending is inevitable, Meeson's nephew marrying both the will and the girl, thus keeping them in the family.

V-L-S-E, INC.

THE TARANTULA (Vitagraph—Five Parts—July 17).—The cast: Chonita Alvarado (Edith Storey); Pedro Mendoza (Antonio Moreno); Donna Luz (Eulalie Jensen); Senor Alvarado (L. Rogers Lytton); Van Allen (Charles Kent); Teddy Steele (Harry Hollingsworth); "Beauty" Smythe (Emmanuel A. Turner); Saunders (Raymond Walburn); Brokaw (Harold Foshay); Stuyvesant (Gordon Gray); Fernandez (Templar Saxe).

"Beauty Smythe is at his old tricks again. Look at the raving beauty he's got on the string now." This was Manning's contribution to the discussion, which was taking place in one of New York's most exclusive clubs. All seemed to take a jolly view of the matter, except Van Allen, who, the others noticed, looked with disapproval on the flirtation. They could not understand his mood, and prodded him for his prudishness. When Smythe joined them, Van Allen called him over and asked him to listen to the story he was about to tell—the story of one man who paid for his loose habits.

First, he drew from his pocket, a picture of a young man, about Smythe's age. "My sister's only boy," he said. "Two years ago he was leading the kind of life you are now, Smythe. He came down to Mexico to visit me and met Chonita, a pretty Mexican girl. He immediately became infatuated with her, to the consternation of Pedro, another of her lovers, who soon saw that Teddy held a higher place in her heart than he. When her father heard of the affair, he sent her away to their summer hacienda, hoping that she would forget Teddy. Then Ted received an invitation from a friend to spend the summer with him, and accepted. Out hunting one day, he met Chonita and both were happy at the reunion. He told her of his love for her—and she believed him. Of course he promised to marry her.

"One day, while walking through the forest, Ted just missed stepping on a tarantula, and shrinking from the hideous thing, told Chonita that he feared those terrible spiders worse than anything on earth. Some time later, Ted received a note from her telling him to meet her at the usual place, and from the tone of the note he knew what had happened. She came, and brought a minister with her; but Teddy was married, and had two children, so even if he had wanted to, he could not have married her. Before word got back to the hacienda, Ted had hopped on a horse and started at a mad gallop for the railroad station, to avoid the wrath of her father and Pedro.

"Back in New York once more, he felt secure. Chonita meanwhile was thrown out of her father's house, and her child was born in an abandoned cabin. It lived but a few hours. Then Chonita got a position as dancer in a cheap music hall and became popular immediately. The proprietor of a New York cafe, seeing her perform, asked her to come to the city and dance for him. When she remembered that her betrayer was also in the city, she accepted. Hearing of her proposed trip, her father sent her a dagger, so that she might first kill Teddy and then herself, but she returned it, telling him that she would choose her own method of death for both of them.

"In the city she met Teddy once more. She responded to all his advances and finally induced him to invite her to his apartment. Here she presented him with an elaborate jewel case, which, she said, contained a gift. When his anxious hands opened the case, a giant tarantula crawled out. Need I tell you that he died a terrible death?"

In a meditative mood, Beauty Smythe sat in his room and reflected on what he had heard. Then the moral hit home, and the letter he had intended sending to his latest "sweetheart" never went further than the trash basket.

KERNEL NUTT AND PRINCE TANGO (Vitagraph—July 17).—The cast: Kernul Nutt (Frank Daniels); Mrs. Nutt (Mrs. Anderson); Prince Tango (Nathaniel Griswold); Maid (Olive Trevor). Written by Ross D. Whytock. Directed by Charles Dickson.

Kernel Nutt, a seafaring man, has the misfortune to possess a wife who believes in the uplifting of humanity. When the uplift society, of which she is a member, decides on Prince Tango, son of a Zulu chief as their protege, and plan to hold a reception in his honor in the Nutt home, Kernel Nutt sees that something will have to be done. He has the Zulu kidnapped and, dressed as a man eating cannibal himself, he enters the room where the uplifters are anxiously awaiting Prince Tango. Nutt gives them a wonderful exhibition of cannibalistic tendencies and convinces the society that they better abandon their uplifting. Meanwhile, Tango has managed to break away from his kidnappers and rushes into the room which he just left in proxy. He clears the matter up and when a bit of burnt cork is found on Nutt the fireworks start in earnest.

TRIANGLE FILM CORP.

THE LITTLE SCHOOL MA'AM (Fine Arts—Five Parts—July 16).—This picture is released in place of "Devil's Needle," which was announced in last week's issue as being released on July 16.

The little school ma'am has gone out to a western town from her home back in Virginia. The townspeople just can't help making life miserable for the little school teacher, and when a young playwright, who happens to be from Virginia himself, arrives in the town and meets the lonely little teacher, old Mrs. Grundy just runs riot. To make matters worse, the young people go off for a ride and when they wander off to a spring to get a drink, the horse runs away and they have to, perforce, stay out in the woods all night. Then there is a crash, and the school teacher is summarily dismissed from her position.

Once in a Hundred Years

A New Invention Revolutionizes an Industry.

A basic patent has just been granted by the United States Patent Office covering a new machine for the projection of moving pictures.

It can be manufactured at a cost that will make competition by any standard machine on the market impossible.

It works upon an entirely new principle—that of manipulation of the light, as opposed to the manipulation of the film in present machines.

Its principal feature is its simplicity, coupled with the small amount of precision work needed.

It has no shutter and the movement of the film is continuous; thus eliminating all the mechanism of the intermittent movement.

The projected picture is flickerless, owing to the fact that the shutter is eliminated, thus allowing a greater percentage of light to reach the screen.

A demonstration by a working model will be given responsible parties by appointment.

Let This Machine Make Extra Money for You

It Draws Nickels that Would Go Elsewhere

This is the motion pop corn machine. People coming into your theatre, or waiting for the next show to begin, can't resist watching this machine work. They see it pop corn, sort out the unpopped kernels, butter the popped ones with pure, creamery butter and deliver them, ready to be eaten. Then they get the odor of it and out come the nickels. They can't resist all this fascination. Once tasted, Butter-Kist spoils them for any other kind of pop corn. They will come to your theatre, in preference to any other just to get some of this delicious, crisp, fluffy, toasty flavored pop corn on the way in, and out.

BUTTER-KIST
Pop Corn Machine

Extra Profits Run Over $3000 per Year

We have testimonials from moving picture men, merchants, storekeepers, telling of extra profits running as high as $3,120 per year. This machine is its own salesman. And people cannot get Butter-Kist from any other machine. All this extra money is yours without effort. The profit on each bag is 3½c. Capacity is 70c to $4.00 per hour. The machine occupies only 26x32 inches of space.

Profits Soon Pay For It

A small payment down brings the machine. It is making money for you an hour after you get it. It does not take it long to pay for itself out of its earnings. Why miss this money any longer? Get a Butter-Kist machine today.

"Little Gold Mine" Free. Ask for it Today

This wonderful book on money-making gives actual proofs of profits, with photographs and full details. It has shown hundreds of moving picture men the way to make from $2.00 to $10.00 per day extra profits with the Butter-Kist Machine. Send for it at once. No obligation.

"LIBERTY"

A DAUGHTER OF THE U.S.A.

Offers Exhibitors the grandest assurance of a 20-weeks' clean-up ever presented by any serial photoplay. The most timely subject—introducing Mexican border raids; thrilling, dare-devil deeds of heroism; love interest that alone would make a great picture; American soldiers; Texas Rangers; Mexican bandits; a lavish production never surpassed in thrills, realism or tense human interest.

"LIBERTY" will be presented through a brilliant and notable cast, headed by

Jack Holt — Eddie Polo

These popular players will be supported by others almost as well-known, including Bertram Grassby, G. Raymond Nye, L. M. Wells, Maude Emory, and hundreds of expert Rough Riders, trained military men, etc. The scenes along the border will compel the widest interest. Every man, woman and child in the United States will respond to the patriotic appeal of this great serial. Everyone wants to know all about the Mexican Border. Fathers, mothers, wives, sisters, brothers and sweethearts of the boys in khaki now at the front will storm the theatre showing this magnificent, sensational serial.

BLUE BIRD PHOTOPLAYS, (INC)

PERHAPS the most tangible result of the announced BLUEBIRD policy of "The Play's the Thing" is the wider latitude it opens to both producer and moving picture patron.

Where, under the star system, plays must always be selected with deference to the star's "type," the new era has made available as photoplay material the best plays and books the world has known.

The BLUEBIRD policy in the hands of its capable directors is responsible for the marvelous "art that conceals art," which makes BLUEBIRD Photoplays so delightfully realistic.

These facts are being presented each week to some 10,000,000 readers of the Saturday Evening Post, through the medium of advertisements now appearing and to appear for 52 weeks. Increased attendance in all BLUEBIRD theatres indicate the Exhibitor's share in this unprecedented co-operation.

The Eminent Chicago Novelist

LILIAN BELL
1024 EAST 46TH STREET
CHICAGO

July 4, 1916.

My dear Mr. Dixon:

I enjoyed myself rarely last night at THE FALL OF A NATION. It is dramatic photography raised to the *n*th power, enhanced a hundred fold by Victor Herbert's descriptive music. I never have seen anything like it--probably because there IS nothing like it. The finish of this triumph of photography makes other productions seem crude. I shall go again and again and tell my friends to go. I had a distinguished party with me last night, all of whom were both thrilled and delighted. We hardly breathed!

Faithfully yours Lilian Bell

Attacked by the Conspirators

(Extract from Chapter 10)

With a smothered groan, the young officer sank to the ground. All this Cleo saw, but not until Mahlin started toward her did she realize that she was powerless to aid her friends and that her own life was in imminent peril. Then, with Mahlin barely a score of yards behind, she turned and ran like a frightened deer. Satsuma stopped only long enough to rifle Hope's pockets, taking from them his pocketbook, his papers, and the piece of the book-cover containing the key to the code.

Gentlemen:

We read every week in your advertisements at the bottom of your "Sign Post" the following:

"We can only govern our own course by the proven experience of others."

The moving picture manager governs his course by the likes and dislikes of his patrons and the box office receipts are the best way the manager has of telling what pictures his patrons like best.

Having run Big Four pictures for the past year, my experience has been that Big Four pictures head the list, not only for the excellent quality of the pictures and the box office results, but for the satisfactory service we get through the V-L-S-E.

Very truly yours,

THE LOVE DOCTOR

With Mack Sennett
1 Reel Comedy

Cast: Mack Sennett, George Nicholls, Eddie Dillon, Florence Barker

M. T. Hedd, M.D., was a doctor whose pet hobby was to disinfect everything for fear of lurking germs. Even with this to draw him back he got along fairly well in the world. Finally, he decided to make love. Strangely enough, he was making considerable progress in this direction, when his foot slipped. He disiufected his lady love's lips before he kissed her. He hasn't stopped running yet. Released July 17th.

A NOBLE SACRIFICE

1 Reel Drama

Cast: Mary Pickford, Arthur Johnson, Florence Lawrence, Mack Sennett, Flora Finch, James Kirkwood

That the maxim "Beauty is only skin deep" is a true one, is the point brought out in this film in a superb manner. The sacrifice of the love of a girl whose beauty had been marred by an unfortunate accident furnishes the central theme of this inspiring masterpiece. An unusual number of stars are presented to bring out the wonderful portrayals of character. Released July 19th.

WHOM GOD HATH JOINED—with Barbara Tennant

2 Reel Drama

Cast: Barbara Tennant, O. A. C. Lund, J. W. Johnson, Alec B. Francis, Guy Hedlund, Julia Stuart

Polka Holla Camp never encountered a worse criminal than Steve Stone. And yet this same Stone won a woman as his wife thru the uncertain medium of a pair of dice. A child was about to be born to the wife and it was at this point in his life that Steve became a real man, offering his life for that of the mother. Her noble soul saved him from the noose, thus fulfilling the almost divine injunction—"Whom God hath joined, let no man part asunder."

This film is a strong, virile study of every conceivable human emotion in the melting pot of caste and race, the Northwest. Exteriors showing miles of "God's own country" rival the faithful reproductions of true-to-life western mountain homes in this wonder-picture. Released Friday, July 21st.

Unicorn Film Service* will prove a winner for you; remember these points:

Twenty-one reels weekly of the best one and two reel subjects ever produced—
Stars of national reputation in every cast—
Clean and clear new film—
Prices lower than you are now paying for poor subjects and worn-out film—
Posters distinctive in design and compelling in character.

Facts and Comments

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD sincerely appreciates the action of the National Convention in recognizing its services to the cause of the organized exhibitor. We believe that no advance can be made in this industry without taking the exhibitor into the councils of the industry, we have always believed, and believe now, that for fighting the common enemy the exhibitor constitutes the infantry, cavalry and artillery. In the last analysis the moving picture depends for popular favor and prosperity on the man who shows the pictures to the public. The public will judge him as well as the pictures. If he has a just conception of the value and responsibility of his work, he will be the industry's great bulwark against ignorance, predjudice and fanaticism. We believe that the exhibitor can do more for himself and the industry at large by being properly organized. Such has been the signet of our policy ever since its birth. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not look upon this great question as a question of expediency. We do not question and abuse the exhibitor in the early part of the week and load him down with flattery in the latter part of the week. Possessing a conviction we have never been under the necessity of constantly jumping from one side of the fence to the other. Editorial acrobatics may be interesting and as a spectacle even diverting, but there is no sense in it nor any usefulness.

THE hottest fight in the convention was precipitated by the discussion on the advanced deposits. On no subject which came before it did the convention show such vehemence and such unanimity. It seemed to be the consensus of opinion that exhibitors ought to be entitled to the same credit which is extended in other lines of business. Several of the delegates in the course of the debate declared that the deposit system was helping some of the companies to keep alive. In fact it was broadly intimated that some of them did business with the exhibitors' money. Even those who believed that a modified deposit system might be put into effect were emphatic in their opinion that the exhibitors should be allowed interest on their money.

"KEEPING high-priced reels on my shelves in order to give my patrons variety is a pretty expensive proceeding," said one exhibitor in the course of an informal discussion in one of the corridors of a Chicago hotel. His experience is by no means exceptional. At the present time some of the exhibitors following this practice manage to make money in spite of the handicap. It is not, however, a healthy condition by any means and again emphasizes the need of sensible internal regulations. The day is not far distant when such a handicap will be fatal to any exhibitor who attempts to carry it.

AMONG the minor resolutions adopted by the convention was one asking the exchanges not to furnish service to churches, etc., when such service might result in injury to an exhibitor. We do not know how such a rule could be enforced, but even if it could be enforced we seriously doubt its wisdom. Except in rare instances, such competition is negligible. The whole question presented by this resolution will solve itself in the near future when a special educational service will be furnished to churches and schools, which cannot come into conflict with the regular motion picture entertainment. Those of our readers who have followed the plans and suggestions outlined in the "Moving Picture Educator" in this paper will know exactly what we mean. The complete separation between the educational screen and the entertainment screen is one of the few certainties of the future of the motion picture industry.

ON ONE question there is a most emphatic agreement between producers and exhibitors. We are overdoing the star business and advertising third and fourth rate talent into stardom at our expense and to our detriment. This tendency to make stars out of unsuitable material is draining the coffers of the producer and is forcing high rentals on the exhibitors. We fail to see where this system is of any benefit to the public.

Perpetual Aspiration

By Louis Reeves Harrison

BY perpetual aspiration, by ardent desire for the promotion of knowledge for the building of character, for the advancement of human welfare are we able to accelerate the progress of this new art entrusted to our care. It will not do for us to stand still and absorb the benefits it is giving with a free hand. As authors, as critics, as supervisers of artistic treatment, as interpreters of thought and feeling, as contributors to scientific development, as developers of business system, we must have one steady aim, whether individual or collective, and that is for continued improvement.

This new art grew out of a combination of scientific knowledge and mechanical ability not created by any one inventor but through an evolution to which ingenuity of many contributed, here a little and there a little, until it became one of the wonders of the world, a rival to the typographic art as a means of teaching man what he was, what he is and what he may come to be, but the creative genius which built up the means of communication is of a kind distinct from that best calculated to use the means for ends of artistic achievement.

It is to be expected that capitalists outside the business will give initial consideration to the means. Their first idea is to get some sort of an organization in shape, an office, a studio, a director and a company. With scientific work well taken care of by specialists and distribution practically assured for any meritorious line of visualizations, attention becomes very naturally concentrated upon visualization itself, upon reaching some sort of an arrangement for the artistic picturing of this or that superior story in action.

A capitalist on the outside can be excused for thinking that he has mastered the art of producing moving pictures when he has acquired the means of visualization, but is it particularly intelligent on the part of those inside, who have fully acquired the means of visualization, and some experience besides, not to give due consideration to the ends in view? If the chief end of production is dependent upon having something worth while to produce, how many among those who have the artistic means well in hand are giving first consideration to the ultimate purpose?

The dynamo of electric thought and feeling to be distributed is a form of creative genius found in the human mind, one as yet faintly called upon. It is as though we had laid a very complete system of wires, capable of conveying tremendous power, and turned on a feeble current. Now that we have the means of transmitting energy and light and realize fairly well how it can be generally distributed at small cost, is it not time that some attention be given to the dynamo?

There is in existence today a series of effective organizations for the making, distribution and exhibition of moving pictures—moving pictures of what? We have reflected in new form a very large part of what has been done in the older arts, but our race keeps moving along, continually building a new world. The whole idea of civilization is contained in the elevation of our social and individual lives, in the advancement of the arts and learning. The answer will probably be found in the profession of letters, where men learn to build bridges of enlightenment between the past and the future, men with souls big enough not to use a process merely for profit, but for some splendid purpose besides.

The profession of letters is very deceiving in some respects. The fact that it is an intellectual calling has a peculiar effect upon some people. They imagine that a man of ideas, who has acquired a knowledge of how to express and preserve them in language, is one who inclines to make a dry and disagreeable display of what he has learned, a sort of talkative schoolmaster. In truth, when he is gifted with imagination, both creative and constructive, he adopts the entertaining medium of a life story and embodies his thoughts in fiction or in the drama.

The subtle simplicity of Mark Twain, as we are just beginning to find out, was but the mask for an unsuspected Shakespeare in our midst. He was addressing a people sick to death of the gloom and hypocrisy of Puritanism and suited his method to his audience. He so completely won our hearts in advance that we were unaware of his lecture until it had taken effect. Very largely unsuspected of being a man of letters, he was in reality a master of that most seductive and deceiving of all professions. Akin to this misconception is one more stupid, that superior fiction belongs to an inferior department of literature.

Few of us read the essay. Its terms are too concentrated to deeply impress any but logical minds. But let the idea it embodies be put in terms which profoundly affect the emotions, as in superior fiction, written or visualized, and we have a result easily recognized as a work of genius. The ultimate purpose of effective organizations for the making, distribution and exhibition of moving pictures is to widen the vision of our people through the great human story told in superior fiction and as wrought by the skill of those who have mastered the craftsmanship of this new and wonderful medium.

If a producer needs a clue as to what constitutes superior fiction, it is not reasonable to expect that he will ordinarily recognize it when it is brought to his attention, but there is suggestion for him in the idea to be conveyed. Is that idea in accord with the most advanced knowledge of our times, or does it depend upon some old idea, like the inheritance of disease, long proven false? The false should never be sent broadcast among millions of people. Make sure that the author knows what he is talking about and that he is not trying to further the interests of some fad or foolish faith. If he is not in touch with scientific discovery he is behind the times, and his story may be an instrument of evil instead of good.

We are less interested in what we were than in what we are, and less in what we are than in what we are to become. If the author's theme is not in accord with intelligence of today, it is not worth visualizing. Theme: He may develop it in time and place according to his own best judgment. Scrutinize the theme more sharply than structure and structure more closely than treatment. It is of high merit when it adequately presents an idea well thought and well wrought which may contribute to the elevation of our individual and social lives.

The way to pay our debt to great thinkers of yesterday and today, those who have contributed heavily toward making life more beautiful for us, is to enter bravely and unselfishly into the spreading of enlightenment through this wondrous new medium, that we may make life for others more beautiful today and tomorrow. Ours to perpetuate the light of intelligence and to kindle anew every day a desire for improvement, an aspiration perpetual.

The Best Convention Ever Held

By W. Stephen Bush.

WE ARE used to speaking of changes and movements in the motion picture industry as rapid, and in a general way this is quite true. Indeed some of the changes and movements in this industry have been altogether too rapid. In watching the heart-breaking pace at which the industry has moved along, we have come to adopt an unnatural, and I must add, an unhealthy standard of speed. We have lost sight of the fact that all growth must be slow in order to be permanent. Pretty nearly everybody in the industry has sought to apply our usual swift pace to the National League of Exhibitors. Because the organized exhibitor was slow in realizing his needs, because he frequently proved to be indifferent to the cause of organization, because he too frequently disparaged himself and his organization, many men with a contracted vision have been unable to realize the strength and power of the organized exhibitor until the convention just ended in Chicago has come upon them as a revelation.

The time for an unqualified eulogy of the organized exhibitor and of the work done at the Chicago Convention has not arrived as yet. Indeed, to a critical mind, its imperfections are quite apparent; to an impartial observer the work of the convention frequently looked like a pathetic struggle for articulate utterance. The proceedings not only moved slowly, but at times, irregularly and aimlessly. However, no discouraging conclusion can be drawn from these facts. On the contrary, when one considers the earnestness and enthusiasm of the men, their former lack of opportunity, the hard struggle they made in the face of extraordinary handicaps, one cannot help entertaining good hopes for the future. Compared with previous conventions, the Chicago Convention has been a convention of achievement. It has made important and much needed changes in its constitution and by-laws. It has considered, with great attention, and in an admirable spirit of co-operation, the proposals that have been made to it on behalf of the manufacturing interest. It goes without saying that the first steps of a movement toward a re-adjustment of the relations between producer and exhibitor are necessarily slow. Nothing could be more ill-advised than haste, nothing more calculated to excite suspicion at a time and place when every trace of suspicion must be banished.

Not the least significant feature of the Convention, the proceedings of which have been reported by The Moving Picture World with its usual thoroughness and accuracy, is its representative candidate, both in a personal and geographical sense of the word. Many states, formerly unheard of at National Conventions, have been represented at Chicago. The older organizations have been greatly strengthened as is shown by their larger representation. As now constituted the National League covers more than 50 per cent of the populous states in the Union. Thus more than a mere nucleus or skeleton of an organization exists to-day. The example of strong organization in the big states of the Union is bound to have a wholesome effect on the further development of the organization.

For the first time in the history of the Exhibitors' organization, the great majority of the delegates represent large and substantial investments in the industry. The theaters owned by the delegates at Chicago represent investments of many millions of dollars. At the same time, there is a generous sprinkling of the owners of smaller theaters whose aid and co-operation is as necessary as that of the big owner.

The most encouraging feature of the Convention has been its splendid spirit. There was no wrangling, no personalities were indulged in, and all its movements, though at times awkward, never lacked a certain dignity, the dignity which we always find associated with sincerity of motives.

At this writing it seems highly probable that the proposals of the Delmonico Conference will be accepted by the convention. No better evidence could be asked than the spirit of conciliation which has dominated the convention from the very beginning.

The New President

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD congratulates the National League of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America upon the election of Lee A. Ochs as President for the ensuing year. Mr. Ochs possesses the one quality which at this time, above all others, is greatly needed in the chief executive—the quality of energy. He is in the full flush of youth, and whatever success has come to him in life has been due to his strict integrity, to his constructive mind, and to his consistent hard work.

He has been connected with the cause of organization for about three years, and the present splendid state of the league in New York is largely due to his untiring activity.

He is the first president under the new dispensation, which provides for co-operation between producer and exhibitor. Everybody knows that he possesses, in an unusual degree, the qualifications which make success in the office a moral certainty. He has won the respect and confidence of the exhibitors. If he can likewise secure the respect and confidence of the producers he will undoubtedly accomplish a great thing for the cause of the organized exhibitor. The complexion of his mind is essentially practical. He is thoroughly familiar with the needs of the exhibitor, and no one knows the conditions of the industry better than he does.

We hope for a splendid record of achievement from President Lee A. Ochs.

No small credit is due to the retiring President, Frederick J. Herrington, who has labored strenuously and many times without the co-operation he should have received.

KANSAS CONVENTION BREWING.

Christ. Glamann, of Wellington, Kan., president of the Kansas branch of the Exhibitors' League, was in Kansas City on his way to the National. He had a long conference with E. R. Pearson and Charles W. Hardin, directors of the Amusement Association of Kansas, over plans for the joint convention at Topeka which will be called soon, and over the work which will be done in Kansas this fall. Some definite outlines of work were tentatively decided upon—and it can be said now that there will be "something doing." Mr. Glamann visited the various exchanges while in Kansas City.

PLANNING A CONVENTION IN OHIO.

Plans for the proposed convention of moving picture exhibitors of Ohio who are members of the several existing organizations in the state are assuming definite shape, after correspondence on the part of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League extending over several months. Assurances have been received from the heads of the two state organizations that they favor participation on the part of their members, and indications are that the convention will have an attendance of more than 500 exhibitors. It will be held in September or October, and the principal object will be the organization of a single strong body of exhibitors in Ohio.

THE Sixth National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was opened in convention hall, in the Hotel Sherman, on Monday, July 10, at 11.30 o'clock, by National President F. J. Herrington. Supporting him on the platform were Peter J. Jeup, national treasurer; James Delves, national secretary; A. P. Tugwell, member of the national executive board, and Samuel L. Trigger, of New York.

M. A. Corey of San Francisco, first national vice president; Marion S. Pearce of Baltimore, member of the National Executive Board, and S. H. Brophy of Oklahoma, second national vice president, were absent. Mr. Pearce was detained by serious illness, but Mr. Brophy was expected to arrive in time for Tuesday's opening session.

FRED J. HERRINGTON RUNNING THE GAUNTLET BEFORE THE CAMERA AT ESSANAY'S

The following states were represented at the first session: New York, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Pennsylvania, California, Tennessee, Alabama, Iowa, Wisconsin, Virginia, Kansas, Utah and Illinois. Expected on Tuesday are the delegations from Minnesota, Missouri, Mississippi, Kentucky and Louisiana. Thomas Furniss of Duluth and James Gilosky of St. Paul came on ahead of the Minnesota main delegation, which will number about eighteen members.

Governor Dunne, of Illinois, accompanied by Secretary of State Louis Stevenson, son of the late Adlai Stevenson, one time vice president of the United States, arrived promptly at the time of opening and the Governor was received with an enthusiastic demonstration that lasted for several minutes. He was introduced by the chairman in a brief speech in which he contrasted the condition of the moving picture industry as it is today with what it was four years ago, when the second national convention was held in this city, at the Hotel La Salle. The progress had been remarkable in all branches of the business, the speaker declared.

"In a little backwoods town in Pennsylvania, not long ago, the exhibitors held a meeting at which the chief subject of discussion was the selection of a fitting emblem for the moving picture," said Mr. Herrington. "After many suggestions one of the members referred to the wonderful popularity of moving pictures and to their dominance of the entire country.

"'There is only one emblem that can fill the bill,' said the man, 'and that is the Stars and Stripes.'"

Governor Dunne, who was formerly a judge of the Superior Court, of Chicago, and afterwards Mayor, enthused the delegates by a speech that paid high honor to moving pictures from an entertaining and an educational viewpoint. The speech, in part, is here given:

"On behalf of the State of Illinois I greet you and extend to you a hearty welcome while within our gates. The industry in which you are interested, and which you represent in this convention, is one of recent development, but it has become of far-reaching importance among the great industries of the country.

"The agricultural implement industry reaches the farmer, and the automobile industry reaches the people in comfortable circumstances, but the moving picture reaches every man, woman and child, because the mothers bring even their babies. In this respect the newspapers cannot be placed in the company of pictures.

"Because of the universality and widespread character of the moving picture, it is every citizen's concern that it be conducted honestly, decently and economically.

"In some respects it imparts information that cannot be given by the newspapers. No written description can give the accurate and thorough information of events taking place in this country and throughout the world that the moving pictures do.

"The moving picture, therefore, can become a mighty power for good, or it may become a power for evil. If conducted by evil men with evil objects, it might disseminate poison instead of profitable, instructive and intelligent information.

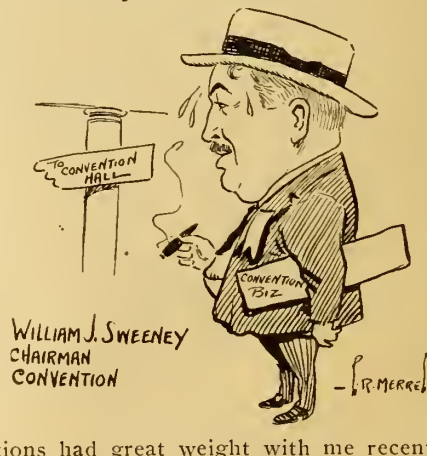
"The question has been frequently raised as to whether it is necessary for the state officially to censor its motion picture exhibitions. Many cities have already adopted boards of censorship and some states have created boards of censorship.

"As to whether this movement, in the direction of official interference with the industry, shall be extended or be abandoned depends largely upon the character of the men that operate the industry, and on the character of the exhibitions shown to the public.

"The people want what is just and fair. The less laws against legitimate business, legally conducted, the better.

"If the industry is conducted upon lines of decency and propriety, the demand for censorship will not prevail. If, on the other hand, vicious men, uncontrolled by public law, should exhibit vicious pictures which demoralize the young, then the demand for censorship will be insistent.

"Private enterprises should not be interfered with by restrictive legislation, unless in the legitimate exercise of the police power for the public good. If, however, the morals of the public are being lowered by purient and indecent exhibitions, that moment the state has the right to step in and prevent such injury to public morals.



WILLIAM J. SWEENEY CHAIRMAN CONVENTION

"These considerations had great weight with me recently when there was presented to me for my signature, as Governor, a law creating a board of censorship for the State of Illinois. I made careful inquiry at the time as to the need and necessity of such a law. I found that the city of Chicago had established such a board of censorship, and that motion pictures shown in that great city were censored by this board.

"I was informed that most of the pictures so censored in Chicago were exhibited throughout the State, and upon inquiry I found throughout the State no serious complaint against the moving picture men in reference to the pictures exhibited by them. I found no serious demand for the creation of the board of censorship and such being the situation I vetoed the bill creating such a board.

"I vetoed the bill because I was convinced that exhibitors in Illinois were conducting their business on clean, respectable lines. Conduct your business as conducted in the State of Illinois and you will have no censorship.

"I congratulate you men in the moving picture industry in this state upon having so managed your business as to justify me in my veto of the censorship bill. I hope and trust that the moving picture business will always be so conducted in this state as to make unnecessary the passage of any further censorship bills."

At the close of Governor Dunne's address it was moved by Benjamin Zerr, of Reading, Pa., that he be given honorary membership in the M. P. E. L. of America. The motion was seconded and carried by a rising vote, which was succeeded by a burst of cheering that lasted several minutes.

Secretary of State Stevenson followed the Governor in a short address, in which he informed the convention why he had recommended that Governor Dunne should veto the censor bill, which he, the Secretary, had been instrumental in passing through both houses of the Legislature. He declared that within ten days after the bill had passed his office had been deluged by applications, to the number of 200, while there were only three positions to be filled. He had carefully studied the fitness of these applicants eager to become censors of the people's chief amusement, and concluded that not one of them had the qualifications necessary.

"If the matter of State censorship should ever come up again I will oppose it, as the men who came forward then were so utterly unequal to the task," said the State Secretary.

Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles, being next called on by the chair, made a witty and eloquent short speech, in which he expressed the wish that he might be an Illinoisian—until after the election, in which Governor Dunne seeks to succeed himself. He closed by enjoining every exhibitor in Illinois to work, tooth and nail, and vote for the re-election of Governor Dunne.

Through the courtesy of the Monarch Film Co., of Chicago, Gene Greene then sang a number of ragtime comedy songs, to the great glee of the convention, which adjourned at 1 o'clock P. M., until 10 o'clock A. M., Tuesday, after the chair announced a meeting of the national executive board, at 8 o'clock Monday morning.

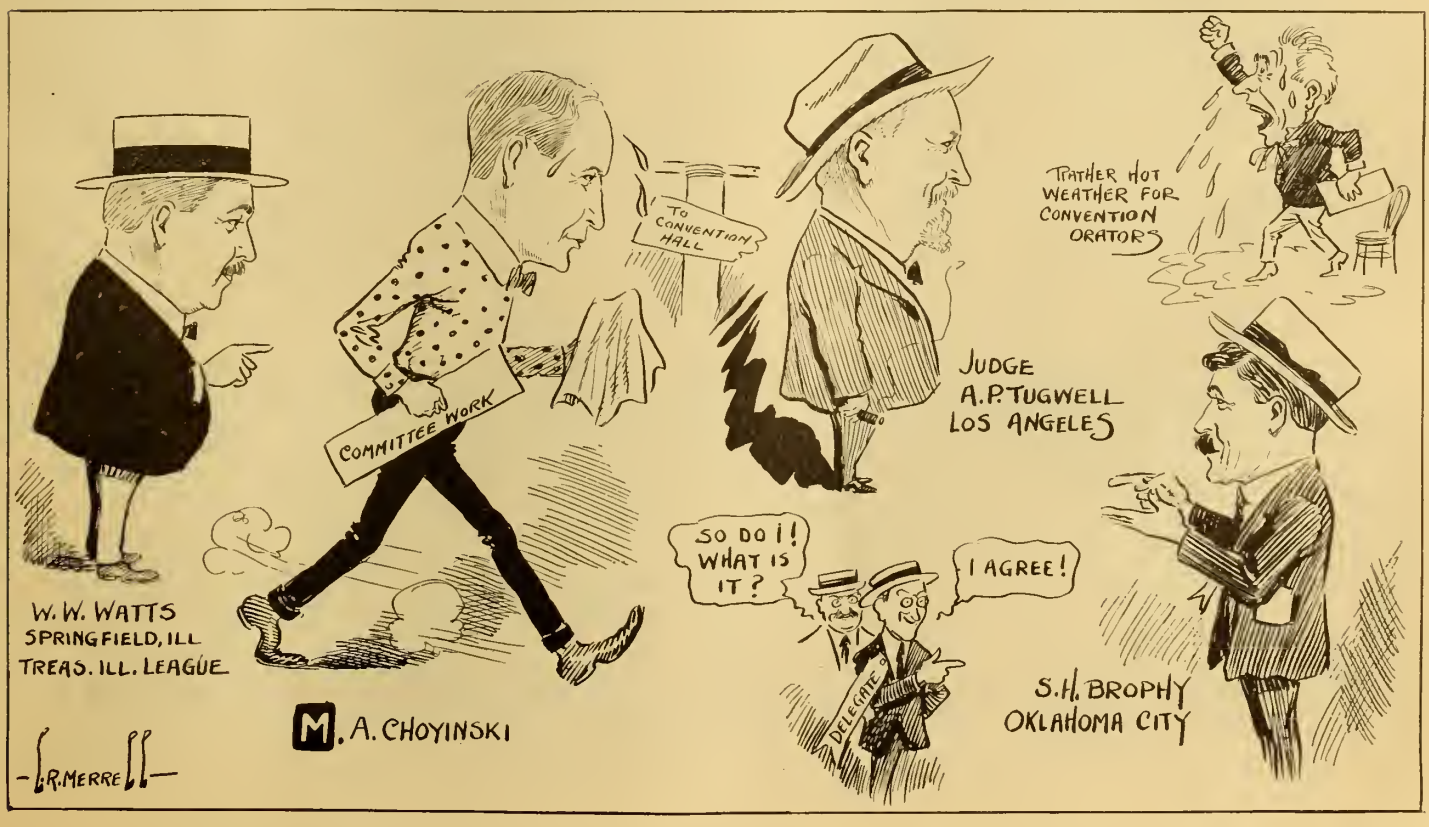
Meeting of National Executive Committee.

The session was held on the Mezzanine floor of the Hotel Sherman. Chairman Herrington announced that the meeting would be an open one and the proceedings informal, and that any delegate would be given an opportunity to speak on any subject for the general welfare of the industry.

Copies of the proposed by-laws of the new general organization had been freely distributed among the delegates. The copies contained a good many thousand words, and the exhibitors, being very busy, had had but little time to make themselves acquainted with the text.

W. Stephen Bush was called upon to say a few words upon the subject of the by-laws of the new organization. He called the attention of the meeting to the fact that the new organization was waiting upon the approval and co-operation of the national league. He said the subject was one of great importance and would require the deep and earnest consideration of the delegates. Some of the provisions might be found objectionable. Others, no doubt, would be considered with favor. He pointed out that with the growth of their organization, new power had come into the hands of the exhibitors and that it behooves them to exercise this power with a full sense of their responsibility. He said that the manufacturers, or at least those manufacturers affiliated with the board of trade, had come to recognize the importance of the exhibitor in any thorough representative film parliament.

Judge Tugwell interrupted the speaker to point out that the rules of the new organization were more liberal to the exhibitor than had been the constitution of the board of trade. The latter organization had given the exhibitor about one-fifth of the representation on the board of directors, while the new organization gave him one-third. Judge Tugwell thought that even that proportion was not commensurate with the influence and the numbers of the exhibitors.



Other delegates present criticised the entries first proposed by the new organization as inequitable and disproportionate.

Mr. Bush was followed by Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana, one of the candidates for the office of president. Mr. Rembusch complained of poor business, citing some of his experiences when he was in the business of making and selling mirrors. He thought there was too much competition in the exhibiting ranks.

"The moving picture business," he continued, "has reached that state when it is incapable of further expansion. This crisis comes about in every industry and it has now come about in the moving picture industry. We have really done nothing in the past to show our power as an organization."

Mr. Choynski expressed the opinion that the two organizations should exist separately, and each independent of the other; but that in all matters touching the common interests of the industry there should be intelligent and sympathetic co-operation between producer and exhibitor. Mr. Choynski imparted a strong flavor of humor to his remarks, dealing in a witty fashion on his personal experiences as an exhibitor in various parts of the country.

There was some more informal discussion, after which the meeting adjourned.

Among those present at the meeting were: A. P. Tugwell, Benjamin Zerr, M. A. Choynski, Frank J. Rembusch, Thomas Furniss, William J. Sweeney, James Delves and W. Stephen Bush.

Tuesday's Events, July 11.

Tuesday's session was called to order by President Herrington at 10.30 o'clock. In a few well chosen words he enjoined on delegates the high importance of peace and harmony throughout their deliberations. He then named the following committee on credentials: Thomas Furniss, Duluth, chairman; Wm. Slimm, Cleveland; S. H. Jones, Oklahoma; A. J. Moellar, Howell, Mich., and George Henry, Chicago.

The committee spent most of the day on their work, so as to be in readiness to make their report at the opening session Wednesday morning.

Benjamin Zerr, of Pittsburgh, then moved that the privilege of the floor be extended to W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World, at all times during the convention. The motion was seconded and carried unanimously.

It was also carried that the representatives of the trade papers be permitted to be present on the convention floor during the proceedings.

W. E. Johnston of the Motion Picture News was then given the privilege of the floor to speak on the subject of the charter and by-laws of the National Association of the moving picture industry, which had been submitted July 6 to the committee-at-large on organization. Mr. Johnston stated that he preferred to yield the floor to hear W. Stephen Bush speak on the question. Mr. Bush replied that since there was so much urgent and important business to attend to mere speech making seemed to him a waste of time. He thanked the convention for the very generous reception which had been given him and on behalf of the Moving Picture World thanked the delegates sincerely. He then spoke as follows:

"There is just one thing that I want to point out to you. It has been said that we must forget the past and that yesterday has passed into oblivion forever. That may be true, but it must also be recognized that the past is the parent of the present and future, and if there is any way of progressing except through studying the lessons of the past, I have been unable to discover it. You cannot separate the past from the present. I advise you to study the processes by which the power in this industry has gradually passed into the hands of the exhibitor. Partly it has been due to your own efforts, which you have continued steadfastly in spite of much discouragement, and in spite of the neglect and indifference which are too often found in your own ranks. Partly this change in the situation has been due to other causes quite beyond your control.

"I will only touch upon these matters briefly now, for the one thing I desire to impress upon you this morning is the fact that with the acquisition of new powers you must be prepared to face new responsibilities. There are grave problems to be solved in the industry—problems that are not only grave, but that press for the earliest possible solution. These problems cannot be solved except by your acting for the benefit not only of yourselves, but of the entire industry. You must consent to accept the new responsibility and to discharge it to the best of your ability.

"I need not assure you that the Moving Picture World is anxious to serve you in this matter. The Moving Picture World believes that no advance can be made in this industry without the active support of the exhibitor. They are in close touch with the people. No business is more directly subject to the will of the people than your business. No industry depends more than ours on the good will and the confidence of the public. To gain that good will, to secure that confidence, the exhibitor is indispensable.

"It is the same with the material prosperity of the motion picture. Here, too, no satisfactory progress can be made unless the prosperity of the exhibitor is assured by intelligent work on his part and by intelligent co-operation from every other branch of the industry. Our conviction is that the progress and prosperity of the motion picture depends, to a very large extent, upon the quality and the character of the men who constitute the exhibiting body. I urge you to use the power which has come to you with great caution and deliberation.

"When the time comes and the occasion calls, you must be prepared unhesitatingly to place this power at the disposal of the entire industry. The time may come when other branches of the industry may ask you to share this power with them. In that case, I advise you to be prudent and circumspect, not to part with it lightly, and, above all things, to maintain the separate entity and the full integrity of your own exhibitors' organization."

Sam Spedon, publicity manager of the Vitagraph, was next called upon. He declared that the producer was looking to the convention to do many essential things that he would like to do himself in the interests of the business. The producer would rather have the exhibitors take up the task themselves. Producers had found that they could not do the right things without the co-operation of exhibitors.

The exhibitors must settle many of the questions that arise in the business for the producer. He objected to the use of the word "power" by Mr. Bush in his speech and advocated that instead of exercising "power" the exhibitors should consider it a "trust" that has been placed in their hands for settlement. This trust must be exercised to the benefit of the business generally, and he hoped that the convention would be able to handle the question wisely so that the result of their deliberations would result in the welfare of all the branches of the industry.

P. A. Powers, treasurer of Universal, was the next speaker named by the chair. Mr. Powers said that he agreed with all that Mr. Spedon said. He was much interested in what exhibitors would do, and not in dictating what they should do.

Producers are now suffering from the increased competition and the enormous salaries paid to artists. He charged that the demands of exhibitors had created this increase of salaries, which he considered a great detriment to the business.

"A few artists get all the money in the business, so far as profits are concerned," Mr. Powers said. "They will receive more during the coming year than is made by the entire industry."

It had been the experience of Mr. Powers that there is no easy road in the moving picture business. At first things looked roseate and he had expected a home by the shore in summer and a house in town during the winter, and other things, but that they had not come in yet.

He looked upon the competition of Wall Street as a great menace, as it meant that men of money are induced to put amount after amount of large sums of money in production in the hope of big gains. This abuse must be remedied in order that the business is placed on a sound basis. He believed that the exhibitors and producers can help to protect the business by hearty co-operation.

Al Reichman of the World Film Corporation, Paul Cromlein of Cosmofoto Film, and Bennie Zeidman, of the Fine Arts studio, Los Angeles, representative of D. W. Griffith, next in order, made a few remarks on the question.

In answer to a question put by F. J. Rembusch concerning admission to the meetings of the convention, President Herrington ruled that exhibitors were welcome at all meetings, whether members of the League or not, but that the sergeant at arms should first ascertain whether they were exhibitors or not before admitting them.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, arrived at this time and was invited to address the convention. He remarked that he had some times heard people say that the interests of the producing, distributing and the exhibiting branches of the business are not identical, but he believed that all were in the same boat. Each one must do its best. He had formerly been an exhibitor and realized early that the public is very discriminating. He had always been proud of being in the moving picture business. He declared that Paramount will do its best to cooperate with the exhibitor, and will work hand in hand with him for the betterment of the business. He closed by drawing attention to the fact that Paramount Day at the exposition would be made prominent by the presence of Mary Pickford and Pauline Frederick.

Judge Tugwell then moved adjournment until Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, and it was so ordered.

The influx of delegates Monday evening and Tuesday morning was quite noticeable in the large crowd at the Hotel Sherman. Minnesota came in strong, and the contingents from Missouri and Mississippi arrived. S. H. Brophy of Oklahoma City also came in Tuesday morning. The delegation from Iowa is very strong, and includes many exhibitors who are not members of the League. A strong delegation has been promised from Wisconsin Wednesday morning. Charles Philips of Milwaukee, who came on in advance, asked the chair to see that at least two rows were reserved for the Wisconsin delegation.

Reception at Essanay Plant.

Delegates and their families, nearly all of them from out-of-town cities throughout the country, to the number of 650 by actual count, paid a visit to the Essanay plant Tuesday afternoon.

The party went out on three special trains, on the Northwestern Elevated Railroad, in charge of Ben Bedell, a representative of Essanay. They arrived at 2 o'clock and many of them waited until 5, seeing the sights and witnessing the production of two big pictures.

On the arrival at the plant the party marched two abreast past a moving picture camera, and the pictures resulting were produced in the theater, in the Coliseum Annex, Wednesday evening, the opening night of the exposition.

The exhibitors then assembled in front of a large platform, on which there appeared, in order, a large number of the Essanay stars, chief among whom were Henry Walthall, Bryant Washburn, Edward Arnold, Earnest Maupain, John Cossar, Thomas Commerford, Warda Howard, Nell Craig, Anna Kirke, etc.

V. R. Day of Essanay had general charge of the arrangements and of the reception, which will be long remembered by the visitors.

Before leaving most of the visitors were given tickets to "Ramona" at the Auditorium, which had been secured by the members of the Chicago local from the "Ramona" management.

Wednesday's Events, July 12.

The inevitable "lull in the proceedings" which comes in the work of every convention characterized the third day of the convention. The day started off briskly enough and the forenoon saw a good deal of important work accomplished. The session was called to order promptly at 10 o'clock A. M. at the Hotel Sherman, and the first order of business was the report of the Committee on Credentials.

This report had been awaited with great interest and some anxiety. When it was read to the convention by the chairman, Thomas Furniss of Minnesota, it was found altogether acceptable. Mr. Furniss reported that all credentials and all claims to representation on the floor of the convention had been carefully examined into and passed upon by the committee with the result that one hundred and twenty-seven delegates had been found eligible to take part in the deliberations and in the voting of the convention.

The following states were represented: New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, New Jersey, Iowa, Indiana, Missouri, Mississippi, Florida, Oklahoma, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, California, Ohio, Kansas and Louisiana.

President Herrington appointed the following committees: Ways and Means—Charles Megown, Ohio; Samuel Trigger, New York; L. H. Frank, Illinois; H. A. Barthell, Pennsylvania, and Louis Blumenthal, New York.

Committee on Resolutions—Samuel Bullock, Ohio; A. P. Tugwell, California; Dr. J. M. Rhodes, Indiana; Alfred Hamburger, Illinois, and Louis Blumenthal, New York.

Committee on Constitution and By-Laws.—Charles H. Phillips, Wisconsin, Frank J. Rembusch, Indiana, Charles Megown, Ohio, and M. A. Choynski, Illinois.

Committee on the Press.—Benjamin Zerr, Pennsylvania; J. J. O'Donnell, New York, and Benjamin Lang, Illinois.

The appointment of the committees was well received and seemed to please everybody. Ernest Horstman of Massachusetts asked that a rising vote of thanks be given to Granville S. McFarland, editor of the Boston-American, for his splendid and unselfish services on behalf of the motion picture industry. Mr. Horstman declared that the House Committee on Education had absolutely decided to stand by its original favorable report on the Smith-Hughes film. All efforts to induce this committe to reconsider their action and grant a new hearing to the moving picture men had failed. It was at this critical moment when Mr. McFarland stepped into the breach. He enlisted the aid of Congressman Frank W. Dallinger, a member of the committee, and through Mr.

Delegates Being Introduced to Stars at Essanay Plant.

Delegates to Sixth Annual Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in Session at Hotel Sherman, Chicago, July 10 to 15, 1916.

Dallinger's energetic work a rehearing was granted. The resolution of Mr. Horstman was warmly supported by W. Stephen Bush and Wm. M. Seabury. The resolution was carried unanimously.

Another resolution endorsing Wm. Randolph Hearst and his newspapers for their stand on the censorship question met a less kindly fate. It was freely acknowledged by all who spoke on the proposed resolution that Mr. Hearst had rendered valuable services to the motion picture interests, but it was pointed out that other journals had also gallantly championed the motion picture interests and that it would be invidious to single out any special publication. A motion to lay this resolution on the table was carried by a substantial majority.

It was about this time that a certain restlessness began to show itself on the floor. It may have been due to the heat or it may have been due to some other cause, but one after another of the delegates arose and complained about the slowness of the proceedings. A motion was made and carried limiting each speaker to five minutes, unless his time was extended by unanimous consent. Complaint was also made that the convention on Monday and Tuesday had adjourned too early and a resolution was passed that morning sessions hereafter were to last from 10 A. M. to 12.30 P. M.

The committees appointed as mentioned above retired to their rooms and at once entered upon their work. This meant a thinning of the first ranks and the subsequent lull and tendency to drift no doubt were caused by this circumstance.

A resolution commending the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for its fight against the Motion Picture Patents Company was offered by John Manheimer of New York. It was tabled after some lively debate.

Another resolution called upon exchanges to refuse service to churches, schools, civic and social institutions, etc., if the church or school were located in the immediate neighborhood of a motion picture theater. Mr. Blumenthal of New York moved to amend this by allowing the exchanges to give such service provided that the exhibitor likely to be affected by the entertainment in his neighborhood had been consulted and his consent obtained.

This resolution precipitated a hot discussion. Most of the delegates spoke in favor of its adoption with the New York amendment. It was pointed out that in many cases churches had pleaded poverty with an exchange and had obtained reels at an absurdly low figure, much below the amount charged to the exhibitor. Judge Tugwell caused a burst of applause mixed with quite a little laughter when he said that churches and other institutions wishing to compete with motion picture exhibitors should "pay a license and hire a hall."

Another resolution called upon the studios not to admit the public indiscriminately because it had a tendency "to destroy the illusion and diminish the interest." The morning session adjourned about half past 12, until 2 o'clock.

Wednesday Afternoon Session.

In the afternoon the "lull in the proceedings" was very pronounced. Sometimes "trifles light as air" occupied the time of the convention; at other times the informal way of procedure and the lack of parliamentary knowledge became responsible for some snarls and tangles, and needless controversy.

It was asked when the election of officers would take place, and where the next convention would be held. The chairman replied that that would be the last business of the convention. Not having more business on their hands, two delegates were sent down to the room where the committee on resolutions were conducting their work. That committee, however, had nothing to feed into the yawning hopper upstairs and there ensued some more unmelodious grinding. Later it was announced that the committee on credentials would continue in session during the convention.

A motion was then made and carried to make W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World an honorary member of the National League. An adjournment was then taken until 10 a. m., Thursday, July 13.

Chairman Herrington gave a warning to the effect that he would open the proceedings promptly at 10 o'clock and that he would send the sergeant at arms after all belated members.

Exhibitors' Trade Exposition at Chicago

Big Show Opens at the Coliseum on July 12 and Does a Turn-away Business.

THE sixth annual exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was opened at the Coliseum, Chicago, at 7 o'clock p. m., July 12, according to the program; but it was not until one hour and a half later that it was formally declared open by Henry Miller, Mayor Thompson's candidate for district attorney in the approaching election, who had been appointed proxy for the occasion.

Mr. Miller was introduced by M. A. Choynski, and his remarks were confined to an expression of good will toward exhibitors and good wishes for the success of the exposition, as the din of musical instruments and the deadening volume of sound from many thousands of throats made it impossible for any single voice to combat them.

The scene inside the Coliseum was marked by bewildering light effects and a veritable sea of changing colors. The writer had seen many expositions in the great building, but none that equaled this in artistic beauty; nor had he ever before encountered on the floor such almost impassable surges of people. It was really a great physical feat to make headway against the human streams that flowed slowly but irresistibly in the direction in mind.

The tally at the doors showed that the 10,000 figure was passed at nine o'clock, and this soon reached the 12,000 mark, after which the fire authorities refused further admission until the crowd had thinned out.

Essanay's Night at the Exposition.

The balconies, especially on the centers east and west, were crowded. Mothers with their children and others, who feared the strenuous task engaged in by those on the floor, looked down on the scene surrounding the Essanay booth, where the stars of that company were being favored with the honors of the evening. It was Essanay's night, and the home fans, as well as many visitors from surrounding towns, vied with each other to get within looking distance.

Among the Essanay stars in the attractive group who appeared in the booth were Henry Walthal, Miss Edna Mayo, Richard C. Travers, Miss Marguerite Clayton, Bryant Washburn, Misses Anna Kirke, Warda Howard, Nell Craig and Lillian Drew, and Edward Arnold, John Lorenz, Earnest Maupain, Thomas Commerford and Sidney Ainsworth.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Co. made the most spectacular and attractive entrance on the scene during the evening. Headed by the Universal band of 25 pieces, Carl Laemmle, P. A. Powers, Joe Brandt and a large following of leading members of their New York and Chicago staffs entered the doors shortly after 9 o'clock, the band playing vigorously. The band continued to play after it had reached its position until the close of the exposition that evening. The exposition management had overlooked to provide a band for the occasion, and so Universal came to the rescue and added to the pleasure of the thousands of visitors.

A walk over the floor of the Coliseum revealed a series of booths that for decorative display and color tone it would be hard to excel. All the big film companies seemed to have tried to make their booths give an expression of their attempts in the production of moving pictures. Metro had its distinctive type of booth, which is altogether different from that of Paramount, and this again from that of the General Film Co., and that again from Mutual, Universal, Pathe Exchange, Inc., and so on. A description of these booths will be given later.

The manufacturers of machines, supplies and accessories were beautifully housed. Chief among these may be mentioned the Nicholas Power Co., the Precision Machine Co., Enterprise Optical Co., Kleine Optical Co., Westinghouse Electric Mfg. Co., J. P. Seeburg Piano Co., American Photoplayer Co., Bartola Musical Instrument Co., Decorators' Supply Co., E. E. Fulton Co., Mid-West Theater Supply Co., Amusement Supply Co., etc. All these will be described in detail later on.

Clara Kimball Young's Day.

Thursday, July 13, was devoted to Clara Kimball Young at the exposition, and all day long her admirers lingered in front of the Central Film Corporation's booth, at the north end of the building.

The pleasing smile and winning manner of this popular star seemed impervious to the fatigue of standing on a chair for hours at a time, and the sound advice she gave hundreds of girls who seek fame in front of the camera, should bear fruit in disillusionizing many who were hitherto ignorant of the work and the talent and the other attainments required.

In the booth were Lewis J. Selznick, Aaron J. Jones, Nathan Ascher, H. A. Spanuth, Ralph T. Kettering and a number of women relatives and a few favored visitors.

The noted star put up at the Blackstone Hotel, and even there her ardent admirers tried to disturb her peace and quietude by their solicitous requests for an audience.

She arrived Wednesday, July 12, and spent a very busy day in delivering addresses at several of the Ascher houses, and after a day at the exposition again resumed these pleasing little addresses at the remaining Ascher houses, and in others where the films in which she appears will be shown.

Miss Young was the recipient of an unusual honor on Friday, July 14, when she attended a luncheon at the select Hamilton Club, at 12:30 p. m. She is the first moving picture star who has ever received an invitation from this exclusive body.

On Thursday night Miss Young's party, occupying fifteen autos, on its way to the exposition from the Blackstone Hotel, was headed by the celebrated Chicago Newsboy Band. Miss Young left for New York Saturday afternoon, July 15, accompanied by Mr. Selznick.

On Thursday, July 13, Rose Tapley, the well known star, shared honors with Miss Clara Kimball Young at the Vitagraph booth and in the Annex, where she delighted and amused a great many visitors.

The attendance for the day, while it did not reach the mark set on the opening night, was another convincing evidence of the intense popularity of the moving picture and of its tremendous hold on the minds of the great masses of the people.

Metro Day at the Exposition.

Through some strange misunderstanding or mishap, the day set apart for Metro stars, Friday, July 14, at the exposition, brought some disappointment to expectant fans. The Metro stars were not forthcoming.

It appears, from what can be gleaned about the arrangement, that the head officers of the Metro were not directly approached by the exposition committee, but only through their representatives in the Chicago office.

The exposition committee, however, made the best of a difficult position, and called on Essanay for help, which was gladly extended. Miss Nell Craig, Bryant Washburn, Harry Dunkinson and others appeared in the Essanay booth to welcome the moving picture fans.

As good luck would have it, Miss Pauline Frederick also arrived the same day, in advance of the day set for the Paramount Co., and Miss Alice Brady stopped over in this city on her way from New York to Milwaukee, where she had thought of speaking to moving picture enthusiasts there. Miss Brady was induced by the members of the exposition committee to postpone her visit to the Cream City, in order to help them out, which she did very gracefully and popularly at the Chicago Herald booth.

Miss Rose Tapley, who has been a veritable busy bee every day thus far at the exposition, at the Vitagraph booth, also contributed her popular entertainment to the crowd in attendance.

Miss Dolores Cassinelli, of the Emerald Motion Picture Co., Chicago, also acceded to the request of the committee and joined with other stars in entertaining the exposition throngs.

The attendance, notwithstanding the extremely sultry weather, was quite worthy of the occasion.

READY FOR NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION.

The plans for the summer convention of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League have about been completed. The convention will open at the Hotel Malbourne, Durham, N. C., on July 19, and last through the next day. Percy W. Wells, of Wilmington, president, and H. B. Varner, of Lexington, secretary-treasurer, have held a number of conferences and it is predicted that this will be the most successful affair of its kind ever held in the State.

Among the guests invited to attend the convention are Thos. Dixon, who, by the way, is a North Carolinian, having lived in Shelby, Cleveland County, and P. D. Gold, of High Point, who is financially interested in "The Fall of a Nation." The exhibitions by the motion picture exchanges of Washington and Atlanta, and of the supply houses, it is expected, will exceed previous affairs.

Universalites Give Ball to Exhibitors

Big U Folk Entertain Delegates and Friends at Hotel Sherman—Big Event of the Convention.

ONE of the most important of the entertainment events during "Moving Picture Week" was the big Universal Moving Picture Ball, which was held in the Louis XVI. Rooms of the Hotel Sherman, Thursday evening, July 13.

The place was handsomely decorated for the occasion, and many of the leading lights of filmdom were present to prove that they can forget business, conventions, expositions and everything in connection with elections, when the orchestra strikes up a fox trot. The ball was an invitation affair and the Universal officials sent out over 1,500 invitations, which were distributed to the exhibitors and manufacturers in town. These invitations permitted the bearer to bring as many friends as he cared to, with the result that over 2,000 people were in attendance.

The ball took place after the exposition in the Coliseum was closed for the day, and by midnight the big dance room was filled to overflowing with people, every one of whom was connected, in various capacities, with the business. An orchestra of fifteen pieces furnished the music, and as soon as the first number was started everybody was on the floor. Despite the intense heat, the eager crowd of dancers continued their evolutions until the small hours of the morning.

In two large rooms adjoining the dance parlors, refreshments were served between dances. A number of high-class entertainers filled in the gaps between the dance numbers, among them being Gross and Craft, professional dancers, and the cabaret performers from the Planters Hotel. In addition, the entire principals and chorus of "A World of Pleasure" company, which is now playing at the Palace, mingled with the guests and appeared in their specialties. Ted Barron's popular hit, "Liberty," which was donated by the writer to the Universal's forthcoming serial, "Liberty," proved one of the big musical attractions of the evening, and it was played and sung until everybody began humming and whistling the catchy air.

The newspaper dailies were represented in force, among the prominent writers being Kitty Kelly of the Tribune, Louella O. Parsons of the Herald, Florence Patton of the American, Mildred Novak of the Examiner, and others.

The Chicago Reel Fellows Club closed their quarters for the evening, and the members attended in full force.

Among the prominent moving picture people in attendance were: Carl Laemmle, P. A. Powers, Louis Laemmle, Maurice Fleckles, Joe Brandt, H. H. Van Loan, M. H. Hoffman, Manny Goldstein, Adolph Zukor, Lewis J. Selznick, Claude Plough, Frank Flaherty, Bryant Washburn, Richard C. Travers, Edna Mayo, Nell Craig, Henry Walthall, Harry Reichenbach, Darwin Karr, Mary McLaren, Walter Irwin, Lee Ochs, Sam Trigger, Al. Lichman, I. Van Ronkel, Sam Van Ronkel, E. Van Ronkel, G. M. Luttrell, W. Stephen Bush, James S. McQuade, Paul C. Hinz, William A. Johnston, F. C. Cropper, Harry Nolan, F. Van Husan, Clara Kimball Young, J. J. Garrity, John Flynn, Benjamin Schuleberg, W. Masters, Sam Spedon, Rose Tapley, Watterson R. Rothacker, Charles Stine, L. Lesserman, F. Weeks, etc.

NICHOLAS POWER LEAVES NEW YORK.

Nicholas Power, famous inventor of Power's Cameragraph and president of the projection machine company which bears his name, left New York on Monday, July 10, for the balance of the summer and will reside at his summer home on Lake Bomoseen, Vermont.

J. F. Skerrett, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has returned to the city after an absence of a month. Will C. Smith, assistant general manager, was in Chicago last week attending the exhibitors' convention in charge of the Nicholas Power Company display at the exposition there.

MOROSCO AGAIN ENLARGES PLANT.

Working facilities of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures are again being increased through enlargement of the plant. The outdoor stage across the street from the main building containing the glass canopied stage is being enlarged so that it will occupy double the original space. This stage is also being re-equipped with a new system of light diffusing and is being rapidly utilized for additional sets that have overflowed from the other stages.

The latest acquisition to the Morosco roster is Harold Holland, whose most recent work on the screen has been evidenced in Chaplin comedies including "The Bank," and "Shanghied."

Pathe Exchange Gets the Thanhouser Product

New Rochelle Producer Says Pathe Facilities Appeal to Him—Will Contribute Two Subjects Each Month

THE Thanhouser Film Corporation, one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry, announces that arrangements have been made with Pathe for the release of two five-reel features per month, on Pathe's greater program of Gold Rooster plays, beginning in August. The contract was signed Wednesday, July 12, by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

This announcement sets at rest many rumors which have been circulated since Thanhouser withdrew from the Mutual program. It was reported that there would be an alliance between Paramount and Thanhouser, and that Pathe had secured the pictures of this great producing company came as a distinct surprise.

"I take great pleasure in announcing an alliance with Pathe," Mr. Thanhouser said to an interviewer in his home in New Rochelle. "Our decision was based on a careful investigation of the motion picture field. One of the most important factors that led to our conclusion to release through Pathe was the fact that Mr. Berst is now general manager of that company.

"I consider Mr. Berst one of the most important factors in the motion picture industry today. Through his long years of association with exhibitors and manufacturers, he has a deep insight into all of the details of the motion picture business.

"I am familiar with his plans for the expansion of Pathe's activities in America and I am glad that we have been able to make arrangements to release our output through a concern with such an enviable reputation."

It is known that another important factor in Mr. Thanhouser's decision was the Pathe accounting system. The accounting system makes impossible much of the waste and inefficiency so common in many companies.

It is known that Mr. Thanhouser was also influenced by the fact that every exhibitor in the United States is visited at least once a month by a salesman from one of the thirty Pathe exchanges.

"It is because of all these things that Pathe has been able to build up one of the most successful organizations in the industry," Mr. Thanhouser said. "Pathe knows how to market high-class features, as well as serials, and I know that the class of pictures we will bring to their program will assure even greater success.

"With our splendid facilities in our New Rochelle and Jacksonville studios, we could turn out eight features a month. Instead we will concentrate on two productions every month. Three of these features have already been made. We have under contract excellent stars, authors and directors."

Thanhouser's new policy will be one-fourth the number of reels and four times the quality. Thanhouser has the resources and the ability to carry out these plans. Edwin Thanhouser is a producing genius; W. E. Shallenberger is one of the creative minds of the industry; Crawford Livingston is the well-known banker to whom is due credit for some of the greatest developments in the motion picture industry.

Mr. Berst was equally enthusiastic about having gained the Thanhouser product for the Pathe program. Mr. Berst made the following statement:

"Thanhouser pictures have been known and admired by exhibitors and public alike for years. The Thanhouser Film Corporation achieved success in the early days of the industry. Each year it has made its success still greater. The company is very strong financially; its stock pays large dividends. The Thanhouser people know the picture business from the ground up. The first features they have made for release through Pathe are excellent. Mr. Thanhouser and his associates are broad-minded and able men, with whom it is a pleasure to be associated in a business way.

"Our combination with Thanhouser gives us more productions for Greater Pathe program. With Arrow, Astra, Balboa, Blache and Thanhouser; with contracts for picture rights to the stage successes of Al. H. Woods and Henry W. Savage, and with a staff which includes some of America's best playwrights, we guarantee future releases up to the standard of 'At Bay,' 'Via Wireless,' 'Madame X,' 'The Woman's Law' and 'New York,' which rank among the greatest features ever produced. Pathe feature releases compare with Pathe serials and Pathe news, which all admit are in a class by themselves."

Negotiations looking toward the alliance between Thanhouser and Pathe were begun some time ago between Mr. Berst and Mr. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation which releases its features and "Who's Guilty?" series through Pathe. Mr. Shallenberger is the largest individual stockholder in the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

With preliminary negotiations opened between Mr. Berst and Mr. Shallenberger, the matter was placed before the executive committee of the Thanhouser Film Corporation consisting of Mr. Livingston, chairman; Mr. Thanhouser and Mr. Shallenberger. At Mr. Shallenberger's suggestion, it was decided that Mr. Thanhouser should conduct the negotiations with Mr. Berst, and the highly satisfactory agreements that have now been entered into by the two companies are splendid tribute to the business ability of these two men.

It is rumored that certain other well-known producing companies are negotiating with regard to an alliance with Pathe because of the unusual advantages which that company offers as a distributing agency.

Clara Kimball Young in Dixon's "The Foolish Virgin."

Picture Rights to Famous Novelist's Popular Story Acquired for Film Star's Second Offering.

TRUE to its stated policy of presenting only filmed versions of popular novels by the greatest modern writers, the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation this week announces as the subject for its second feature picture "The Foolish Virgin," by Thomas Dixon, author of "The Birth of a Nation."

Miss Young, who is already at work upon the screen adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' widely read novel, "The Common Law," will begin the presentation of the Dixon novel within a week or two. This will be in accordance with the system devised by Albert Capellani, director-general of the corporation, under which Miss Young will be able to work in two productions simultaneously and the schedule of one release a month can be adhered to.

"The Foolish Virgin" is the first of Mr. Dixon's famous novels that he has been willing to sell to a film producing company. With the exception of "The Birth of a Nation," which he wrote from his book "The Clansman," Mr. Dixon has been unwilling to see any of his stories adapted for the screen. His works have been among the most sought-after of any American novelist, but until he decided to permit Miss Young to play the heroine in "The Foolish Virgin" the noted novelist of Dixieland had been deaf to all offers.

"I have sold the right to 'The Foolish Virgin' only because I feel that Miss Clara Kimball Young is best fitted to present my book in screen form," said Mr. Dixon after he had completed the business details with Lewis J. Selznick, president of the corporation.

"I have been a great admirer of Miss Young's work for several years. I am confident that her portrayal of the heroine in my novel will add not only to her reputation as an artist but to my own prestige as well."

"The Foolish Virgin" was first produced as a serial story in the Green Book Magazine. It attracted tremendous attention and when subsequently issued in book form sold by hundreds of thousands. The story is peculiarly suited to the screen, having a powerful dramatic theme and being replete with action.

The main thesis advanced in this work of Mr. Dixon's is that the lust for gold inevitably creates a lust to kill; that any man or woman to whom gain becomes an obsession will commit murder if necessary to achieve the desired end.

The heroine of the story is a young girl who is imbued with the belief that marriage is a woman's safeguard. She resists all the temptations thrown in the path of a girl seeking to earn her living in a big city, waiting the first chance that offers with a wedding ring attached. Her disillusionment and struggle to keep from sinking to the level of the man she marries forms the main thread of the story.

Herbert Brenon to Produce Independently

Director of "Neptune's Daughter" and Other Features Has Faith in "Open Market"—To Make Spectacle With Mary Garden

HERBERT BRENON, the well-known producer who has just completed "The Daughter of the Gods" for William Fox, announces his intention to enter the production field on his own account, releasing his product on the state right basis. Concerning this step Mr. Brenon makes the following statement:

"I have decided to enter the production field on my own account because I firmly believe that the present system of feature programs cannot last. About two years ago I left the one and two-reel program field because I felt that it had seen its best day. One-reels were then stretched into two-reels, where in many cases they were not worthy of being placed upon a split-reel. There were very few five-reel features being made then; now practically everybody is making them. Exactly the same conditions exist in reference to the program feature now as existed in a short-reel program then. The subjects worthy of two reels at the most are stretched to five reels.

"I don't say that the industry has gone back; on the contrary, the artistic plane has been raised; but we have reached the day, in my opinion, when the manufacturer who releases from four to eight pictures a year can without the least difficulty release his product profitably in the open market. A housewife isn't going to continue buying fresh eggs at 60 cents a dozen if only two of them are fresh and the rest of them from fair to bad. It seems to me that she is going to do without eggs altogether if they are too high-priced for her, or do with less eggs.

"Exactly the same condition applies to the motion picture industry. There has been forced down the throat of the exhibitor several bad features for every good one, the number of bad features being only regulated by the number of good directors that this or that manufacturer may have on his staff.

"It will be remembered two years ago that I made the first seven-reel feature, 'Neptune's Daughter,' with Annette Kellermann as the star. Until Mr. Griffith produced 'The Birth of a Nation,' this held the record for an American-made production. It ran six months in New York, twenty-seven weeks in Chicago and over three months in Detroit. The public didn't care anything about the length; they liked it, and went to see it. Then last year came 'The Birth of a Nation.' Did the public care about the length of that production? They flocked to see it, didn't they? Why? Because it was a wonderful entertainment. I maintain that any producer who can release an extraordinary subject, no matter what its length, he can show a profit to the exhibitor, to the owner of the state rights and to the producer himself. The regular program feature manufacturers cannot shut him out. First and last, the exhibitor absolutely controls the situation, and the manufacturer that doesn't satisfy the exhibitors over the country with his entire product will sooner or later die a natural death.

"Believing that these conditions exist, I have decided to commence next month producing special features ranging in length according to their power to hold the public. Lots of men have entered the manufacturing field with exactly the same ambition, but the rock upon which they stumbled was that they could not find a surefire director. I can point out to you plenty of splendid business men in the trade today, and yet, when those business men want a first-class director, do they find him easily? I am not tooting my own horn, but I do believe that I know what the exhibitor wants, and I am going to keep faith with him insofar as I shall never supervise a production. When a feature is offered with the name of 'Brenon' as a trade-mark, I want the exhibitor to believe until I break faith with him that I shall have personally produced every foot of it. Upon the exhibitors, therefore, I am pinning my faith. I ask them to remember what results they obtained with 'Neptune's Daughter,' 'The Soul of Broadway,' 'The Kreutzer Sonata,' 'The Clemenceau Case' and 'The Two Orphans.' It was this last picture that Mr. Fox selected for the opening of his fifty-two-a-year policy.

"I shall make these pictures with women stars only, because I believe the public prefers to see them on the screen. I shall make at least four or five productions before next March, when I shall commence upon my great spectacle with Mary Garden as the star. Between now and that time I shall try and keep up the reputation I trust I have gained with the trade by continuing to make productions which will bring patrons into the theater a second and a third time. No star will appear either for me or any other concern for within one year of the date of the release of her feature. I have decided upon this policy because today 'Neptune's Daughter' is still playing with excellent receipts solely because it is the only picture in which they can see that wonderful artiste, Annette Kellermann.

"August 1 I shall begin work on my first production. The star whose name I am not at present at liberty to reveal has never yet appeared on the screen, yet her name is known in every hamlet in the United States, and I, with many others, consider her the greatest living actress who has starred in dramatic productions in this country.

"I shall have as my associate one of the best-known exchangemen and exhibitors in the country, who will handle absolutely all the business details in connection with my output."

At Leading Picture Theaters.

"The Dream Girl" at the Strand.

MAY MURRAY in "The Dream Girl," a Jesse L. Lasky production, written by Jeannie MacPherson, was the star feature at the Strand theater for the week of July 16. The photoplay tells the story of a waif of the slums who lives amid sordid surroundings with a dissolute father. In an ash barrel, the little girl finds a cast-off copy of "King Arthur and His Knights of the Round Table." Entranced by the stories, Sir Gallahad becomes the hero of her dreams. Theodore Roberts is a member of the cast. A "Mutt and Jeff" comic and the Strand Topical Review were also on the picture program. Grace Hoffman, Bruce Weyman and Alfred Newman were the soloists.

"Honor Thy Name" at the Rialto.

Frank Keenan in "Honor Thy Name," a Kay-Bee Triangle production, headed the bill at the Rialto theater. Mr. Keenan played the part of a southern gentleman of the old school, whose loyalty to his sense of family honor prompts him to sacrifice his own life. Charles Ray, Louise Glaum and Blanche White appeared in his support. "Fatty" Arbuckle in "The Waiters' Ball" supplied the comedy picture. The Rialto Topical Review, Monte Carlo in color process photography and a study of marine life were also on the screen program. The soloists were M. Desere De Frere, Mary Ball, John Campbell and Alfred De Manby.

"Davy Crockett" at the Broadway.

Dustin Farnum in the Pallas-Paramount screen story, "Davy Crockett," was the leading attraction at the Broadway theater. This stirring photoplay is filled with scenes of pioneer life. The capture of a big bear, the rescue of two people lost in a blizzard in the mountains, and an all-night struggle in a neglected cabin against hungry wolves, are among the incidents. The usual weekly news pictures, colored scenic, cartoons and a two-part comedy completed the bill.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater, four new Triangle pictures were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Wm. H. Thompson and Marjory Wilson were seen in "The Eye of the Night." On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Dorothy Gish in "The Little School Ma'am" was the picture feature. A Keystone comedy was shown on both programs.

SEEKS SPANISH-SPEAKING SCENARIO WRITER.

The Noreiga Film Company, 16 Beaver street, New York, a newly organized film producing company, advises us it is desirous of getting in touch with an American scenario writer sufficiently conversant with the Spanish language to be able to adapt the several Spanish dramas it has in hand.

Mack Sennett in the East

By George Blaisdell

Famous Keystone Producer, on His Annual Visit to New York, Says, "Things Look Great"

MACK SENNETT, champion funmaker of the films, is on his annual pilgrimage to New York. Mr. Sennett arrived in the big town on Tuesday, July 11, and he says he expects to remain several weeks. His visit is a busy one, being marked by many conferences with the officials of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and by interviews with writers on trade and other magazines and on the daily newspapers. As to the conferences, they are the usual things—taking up of contracts and the many details that enter into the grinding out of pictures that make the millions laugh. The interviews, singly and en bloc, indicate the growing recognition of Mr. Sennett's unique position in the moving picture world—and that is, of course, especially in the case of Keystone, the whole world.

Mack Sennett.

Mr. Sennett is in the pink of physical condition. To maintain just that most desirable attribute the producer gives more than a few minutes of his strenuous day. He does not say so, but it is not likely he will deny that a strong man with a sound body, one who looks upon the world at large through rose-colored glasses, is the one who is best fitted to see the humorous side of every-day life, to extract from the foibles of the ordinary human being material for Keystone comedies. Mr. Sennett brings with him his trainer, and he will tell you confidentially that his athletic preceptor knows a lot more about building muscle than he does about the English language and the niceties of diplomacy, especially when answering a telephone call in his chief's room. But that's another story.

"How do things look?" said Mr. Sennett in reply to a question. "Why, great! The people want to laugh, you know, and we are trying to keep them laughing. The Keystone situation looks better every day. No, we are not thinking about increasing our output. It's a hard thing to increase output and at the same time increase quality. We are trying to increase the quality, and if to do that it be necessary to reduce production why—we'll reduce, that's all. We are now making two reels a week. If we can't make two a week of the sort we want, we'll cut to one.

"Do you know it is getting to be mighty difficult to get funny plots, funny plays? It is not now as it was in other days. Then we could start out in the morning with a cameraman and a director and a funny fellow—oh, yes, with a girl and another man—and a few properties. We might have in mind nothing in particular, but we would look for a location, knowing we had with us the hero, the girl and the villain. We might also have along some robbers, and when we found the landscape that suggested something we would start—'writing' the story and making it, winding up with a few laughs at the end. It was a case of 'Leave it to us'—full of confidence, you know. But those are not pictures any more.

"Yes, it is different now. If every circumstance favors, we may make a subject in a few days or two weeks, or conceivably we may require very much more time. Take our two-reel release of 'The Snow Cure.' That required time for the making. Some of the scenes were photographed in Los Angeles and some in Truckee, 500 miles away. You remember in that picture we had a four-hundred-pound bear. There was one scene we photographed forty times to get that fellow to do what we wanted him to do, and he was not particularly sweet-tempered, either."

Someone remarked that Mr. Sennett had the reputation of not caring who made the picture so long as he had the privilege of cutting it or maybe it was that he was reputed to take more satisfaction in cutting a subject than in making it. The producer smiled.

"I guess that is right," he said. "Really, I think I am Mr. Eastman's best friend. I certainly get a lot of fun out of a pair of scissors. How do we work? Well, after a picture is finished it is assembled in the rough and I sit in with the director and watch it put on the screen. When he is through, I begin. Sometimes there is a noise approximating a groan when I cut out three or four hundred feet in one piece—all the 'fine stuff,' as the director describes it—and in its stead insert one sub-title. It is not so much a question of how much you cut out as it is how little you leave in. I am a believer in the policy of making pictures by elimination. These excisions are frequently occasions for studio sadness, but they are essential for the good of the picture and for contributing to the mirth of those who are going to see it on the screen."

The World man reverted to "Tillie's Punctured Romance," the first print of which Mr. Sennett had brought to New York on his visit of two years ago. The producer was asked if there was anything doing in the feature line.

"There surely is," he said. "Mabel Normand is working on a picture now for which we have hopes. While it is of Keystone origin, it contains no stunts, no tricks, no gags. Well, yes, dramatic comedy is a good description of it. It is serious, in spots. But just when it gets to the point where according to our views a picture lags something breaks. The story is built up steadily, progressively; something along the lines of 'Tillie's Romance,' yet really very much different. We don't know how long the subject will be. It may be released in three or four reels, possibly two; but we hope to have it six or seven. It will be a 'natural length,' anyway. Yes, it will be a special, you may be sure, for a lot of money has gone into the making."

Asked about his producing activities, Mr. Sennett confided that he did not think Keystone would maintain any more companies in the East. There had been some large extensions to the Keystone Western studios. One stage has a floor area of 250 by 125 feet. The roof is 45 feet high, and by the use of steel trusses the whole space is free of posts. Mr. Sennett said he believed his company now possessed one of the largest studios in the world, there being stage accommodations for seventy-five sets at one time. A director has 300 complete sets to choose from, and the company is building others all the time.

HAMILTON MAKING "INHERITED PASSION."

Gilbert P. Hamilton, managing director of the Century Film Corporation with headquarters and studios at Roundup, Mont., is making a seven-reel feature entitled "Inherited Passions," from a newspaper story by Jack Wolf, the scenario being by Dorothy Farley, who also takes the woman lead. Opposite her is William Conklin and in a large and strong cast are George H. Kern, business manager and assistant to Mr. Hamilton; Frank Newburg, Millard Wilson, Mrs. Alma Farley, Charles Mulhall, Beatrice Van and Mrs. Hutchinson. The feature is western and two of the reels are being made at Roundup, while the other five are being produced in Los Angeles.

The company is occupying a stage at the Al E. Christie comedy studios at Hollywood, Cal., and also has stage room at the Pacific studios. The players expect to return to Montana in a few weeks.

"PEG O' THE RING" TO CLOSE.

Notwithstanding the many requests the Universal has received for an extension of "Peg o' the Ring," it has been decided not to continue the serial after the fifteenth episode. "Liberty," the new Universal serial featuring Marie Walcamp, will immediately follow "Peg o' the Ring." "Liberty" is an up-to-the-minute military thriller of the Mexican border. Great bodies of troops take part in the night attacks against barbed wire entanglements and the clash of real Mexicans with real United States troopers is depicted in the serial.

"Girl from Frisco" Ready August 9

Kalem Series Featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman—Will Be Released in Regular Service

WEDNESDAY, August 9, has been definitely decided on as the date of release for the first episode of "The Girl from Frisco," Kalem's big new series of the West with Marin Sais and True Boardman in the leading roles. On that day "The Fighting Heiress," the initial episode of the series, will be issued. A two-reel episode will then follow every Wednesday until the fifteen week period is completed.

Kalem has decided on a radical step in the booking of "The Girl from Frisco," and will place this series by Robert Welles Ritchie through the regular service of the General Film Company. Exhibitors will thus be able to book the western series without any extra charge, in their regular program releases. "The Girl from Frisco" will be the only series on the market thus issued.

In announcing Kalem's decision to book the new series without extra rental, Mr. Wright, of that company, said it took considerable courage to take this stand for "The Girl from Frisco" is being staged at unusual cost and is certain to be one of the costliest series productions ever made. "There would have been every justification for seeking to recover the heavy expenditures by charging an extra rental," Mr. Wright explained, "but we feel that our confidence and faith in the regular program and something more than an 'even break' for the exhibitor will be repaid. Now that so many manufacturers are rallying to the cause of the short picture and the regular program, you will perhaps remember that Kalem has been backing up its words week after week with never a let-up by keeping popular stars in regular program. Now we are going a step further by putting out a feature series of fifteen week length in the same manner."

The stories of the first four episodes of "The Girl from Frisco" appear in the August issue of Short Stories Magazine. That of "The Fighting Heiress," the initial release, will give an idea of the theme underlying the series of the west. Marin Sais, as Barbara Brent, takes up her father's battle against powerful enemies when he is laid low by an assassin's bullet. In the course of the action that follows she leads the cattle rangers in a spirited battle with the sheep herders, captures her father's assailant after a pursuit on horseback that calls for some daring riding, and rescues her admirer, Wallace, from a spectacular prairie fire.

The cast of the first release carries names that make it of all-star proportions. Included among the players are Marin Sais, True Boardman, E. Forrest Taylor, Ronald Bradbury, Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee, B. Furey and Rupert Dell. Miss Sais, Boardman and Taylor are three of the players who have been individual stars in strongly advertised series and feature productions.

Director James W. Horne has his hands full in staging the new series, as Kalem has made a flat rule that the exact locations called for in Robert Welles Ritchie's stories must be secured for the pictures. A two hundred mile journey to the sheep country was necessary for "The Fighting Heiress," while other long trips planned for the early episodes are to Randsburg, on the edge of the desert, to the Bakersfield oil district and the mining section. Thus readers of the stories that will appear in Short Stories Magazine will experience the novelty of seeing the exact towns and spots named in the stories when they view the screen productions.

An Evil That Will Cure Itself

The Double Bill "Evil" Is Bound to Disappear, Says Berst of Pathe, Inc.

THE exhibitor who runs two five-reel features besides two or three short reels in one show is educating his patrons to demand long bills and sooner or later it will cause him to face the necessity of paying prices that he cannot afford for his service is the opinion of J. A. Berst of Pathe.

"There will come a time," he continued, "when the motion picture business will be largely controlled by three or four large companies and because the cost of production will be so great that rentals will correspondingly increase the exhibitor who has thus educated his patrons to see double bills in the hope of stifling competition will find that he has cut his own throat.

"The double bill was first tried out, so far as I know, by the Tivoli theater, San Francisco, which discontinued it soon after because the management found it bad business. Boston at this time is running double bills quite largely.

"Many believe that this is a crying evil and that something must be done about it. I agree that these methods are unwise, but I think that the matter will adjust itself with time. The few exhibitors who have employed this means of gaining temporary patronage will soon find that they were wrong and the many experienced, successful show men who foresaw which way the wind was blowing will continue the policy of a good show, not too long, and not too short, with good music, courteous attendants and all the equipment of a fine theatrical entertainment.

SLADDIN WITH CONSOLIDATED.

S. G. Sladdin, whose publicity work for "Cabiria" and other Broadway feature productions is well remembered, has been appointed Director of Publicity for the Consolidated Film Corporation. This company is producing "The Crimson Stain Mystery," a startling sixteen episode serial, and is preparing to launch one of the greatest national advertising campaigns yet attempted for a serial. Mr. Sladdin has been engaged to take charge of all the publicity. Mr. Sladdin's knowledge of the country through his several years of travel in promoting big propositions in the picture world has ably fitted him to conduct the campaign that the Consolidated is now mapping out.

GEORGE BEBAN LEAVES FOR MAINE WOODS.

George Beban, whose latest photoplay, "Pasquale," has already registered one of the greatest hits ever released by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., has forsaken both the photoplay and the drama for the time being and has left for a few months vacation in the Maine woods. The popular characterizer of Italian roles has polished up his fishing tackle and expects to score as big a success in the matter of catching "big ones" up in the Maine lakes and streams as he evidenced in "Pasquale."

Adaptation of Two Successes Completed

Famous Players Produce Fitch's "The Woman in the Case" and Roi Cooper Megrue's "Under Cover"

THE adaptation of two of the five big stage successes the acquisition of which was announced by the Famous Players Film Company immediately after the formation of the new Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has just been completed. They are Clyde Fitch's great drama, "The Woman in the Case," with Pauline Frederick as the star, and Roi Cooper Megrue's celebrated comedy-melodrama, "Under Cover."

"Under Cover" marks Mr. Moore's return to the Famous Players after a long absence and is his first appearance with Hazel Dawn. It is one of Mr. Megrue's most brilliant successes and has attained a great reputation as a play of action and mystery on the stage. It is therefore particularly well suited to motion picture adaptation and has been admirably directed by Robert G. Vignola.

It will be remembered that the story deals with the efforts of Stephen Denby, a young man of apparent wealth but no visible means of support, to smuggle a $200,000 necklace into the United States. In the cast of "Under Cover," which is released on the Paramount program July 20, there appear Frank Losee, William Courtleigh, Jr., Ethel Fleming and other well-known players in support of Miss Dawn and Mr. Moore.

Pauline Frederick has upset theatrical tradition and all the rules of stardom in "The Woman in the Case," by deciding that she would rather play the less conspicuous role of Margaret Rolfe, the self-sacrificing wife, instead of playing the title role of Claire Foster, which is the part in which Blanche Walsh scored a great hit on the stage.

This powerful drama centers about the vindictive effort of a woman of the world to convict her former lover of murder when he robs her of another victim.

"The Woman in the Case" is one of Clyde Fitch's most successful dramas and contains in great abundance the elements necessary to success on the screen—quick action, suspense and great dramatic force. In the cast which appears in support of Miss Frederick there are several players of international reputation, including Marie Chambers in the role of Claire Foster; Clarence Handysides, Alan Hale and Paul Gordon. It will be released August 7.

"Under Fire," "Nearly Married" and "Rolling Stones," the other plays which were acquired at the same time as these, will be released on the Paramount Program at dates to be determined later.

Selig's V-L-S-E Subject of Unusual Character

"Prince Chap" With a Notable Cast to Be Released July 24

AN UNUSUAL and noteworthy film production in every sense of the word is promised by the Selig Polyscope Company when "The Prince Chap" is released through V-L-S-E, Inc., on Monday, July 24. First, one of the most notable casts of motion picture players is presented. These stars include Marshall Neilan, who enacts the title role; Bessie Eyton, Mary Charleson and George Fawcett. Each and every one of these stars has achieved success and earned wide popularity.

"The Prince Chap" is from the pen of Edward Pepel and is a story of love and adventure in New York City and London, England. The production is crowded with wonderful scenic effects and is marked with unusual photography. Marshall Neilan directed the production, which is in five reels.

Mary Carleson was engaged especially for "The Prince Chap," coming directly from New York with the Selig stock company which filmed scenes in Gotham. She has gone to the Pacific Coast to appear in other Selig productions. Marshall Neilan, Bessie Eyton and George Fawcett completed their work in "The Crisis" just in time to engage in the production of "The Prince Chap." The lighting effects in "The Prince Chap," according to the Selig Company, sets a new pace in filmland.

DUSTIN FARNUM'S ROUTE.

"Dusty" Farnum, the popular Pallas Pictures star, has worn out the index finger of his right hand figuring out his course for the cross-country auto trip which he will shortly make in his new touring car. "Dusty" contemplates using the following route: First stop, Oakland, Cal., then in the order named, Stockton, Sacramento, Placerville, Carson City, Reno, Fallon Austin, Shelburne Pass, Fish Springs, Salt Lake City, Ogden, Evanston, Fort Bridger, Rock Springs, Rawlins, Laramie, Cheyenne, Chappell, North Platte, Kearney, Central City, Fremont, Omaha, Des Moines, Iowa City, Davenport, Tri-City, Joliet, Chicago, La Porte, South Bend, Fort Wayne, Lima, Columbus, Mansfield, Washington, Pittsburgh, Bedford, York, Philadelphia, Trenton, Elizabeth, Jersey City, New York City, Bridgeport, New Haven, Providence and Boston. The film hero will make the trip at easy stages, stopping occasionally to fish and camp. Paramount exhibitors and exchanges are planning receptions for him all along the line.

Brady Inaugurates All-Star Policy

Three Releases Featuring Well-Known Players Starts the New Order of Things on World Film Program

FOR the balance of July, World Film will release three personally supervised William A. Brady pictures of unusual interest, with such stars as Alice Brady, Carlyle Blackwell, Gail Kane, Muriel Ostriche, Arthur Ashley, Johnny Hines, Gladden James and June Elvidge appearing in the casts.

These three releases will mark the inauguration of Mr. Brady's policy of all-star casts in support of the individual star in each forthcoming production. Judging from all present indications, this system will prove quite an innovation for World Films. The first of these releases will be "Paying the Price," which is the release of July 17, being a naval story taken from Burton E. Stevenson's story, "Reparation," scenarioized by Gardner Hunting and directed by Frank Crane. In this picture, the World Film Corporation had the hearty co-operation of the United States Government and by special permission from Secretary of the Navy Josephus E. Daniels, the U. S. Torpedo Boat No. 60, the "Wadsworth," was used to film several scenes, also for the discharge of several torpedoes, one against Clarges Rock in the Potomac River and one against the old ferryboat, the "Bronx," which was blown to smithereens for realistic effect in this picture. Each of the torpedoes exploded cost in excess of $4,500, which speaks in no uncertain terms of Mr. Brady's honest endeavors to give his "New-day" pictures the necessary atmosphere to make each story letter-perfect in every detail. In "Paying the Price" Gail Kane is starred, supported by an ideal cast, including Gladden James, June Elvidge, George Relph, Robert Cummings and Lydia Knott.

Carlyle Blackwell, the universal favorite of the World staff of stars, will be co-starred with Muriel Ostriche in "Sally in Our Alley," the release of July 24. This marks Mr. Blackwell's first appearance since he was seen with Ethel Clayton in "His Brother's Wife," while Miss Ostriche's last picture was "By Whose Hand?" "Sally in Our Alley" has a touch of melodramatic incidents, human interest and pathos combined. It is one of those "a sob, a tear and a smile" pictures that always goes big all over the country, and under Travers Vale's direction, this story of lower East Side life, with its sweatshop scenes taken in an East Side factory, and society scenes taken at the Schwab residence, is replete with heart interest material, and with Carlyle Blackwell taking the initiative in the romantic side of the picture, there is nothing left to be desired. Besides these two stars, Mr. and Mrs. Pat Foy and Jean Shelby are seen to good advantage.

"Miss Petticoats," with Alice Brady in the star role, will be the last release of the month. This picture play is from the book by Dwight Tilton and the scenario of Harley Knoles, who also directed the piece. "Miss Petticoats," it will be remembered, attained widespread attention a few years ago, especially in the New England states, as a stage production and also as a book. The play was on the road for several years, playing long runs in Boston, Providence and New Bedford, Mass., where the scenic plot of the story is laid.

Alice Brady is admirably well cast as "Miss Petticoats," and she is favored with an unusually strong cast headed by Arthur Ashley and Johnny Hines. Others in the supporting cast include Alec B. Francis, Isabel Berwin, Ed. M. Kimball, Louis Grisel, Lila Chester and Robert Elliott. It was directed by Harley Knoles and the principal scenes of New Bedford life were taken at that city, where a company of eighteen players spent over a week in taking those scenes.

Vitagraph Offers Another Anita Stewart Feature

And a Frank Daniels Comedy Make Up the Vitagraph V-L-S-E Program

AS A reporter in "The Daring of Diana," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in five parts, Anita Stewart has a role admirably suited to her talent. Miss Stewart is forced to run the gamut of emotions, but whether confined in the cellar of Stange, the villain, not knowing what next to expect, or resting peacefully and contentedly in the arms of her lover, her portrayal is equally convincing.

The direction of the picture for which S. Rankin Drew is responsible is flawless. The scenes which are laid in Paris carry a true French atmosphere, and the photography throughout the production is excellent.

Anders Randolf, Julia Swayne Gordon, Francis Morgan, Donald MacBride, Charles Wellesley and Joseph Donohue render valuable support to Miss Stewart. The picture is from the pen of Charles L. Gaskill, and will be released through V-L-S-E.

Frank Daniels furnishes many hearty laughs in "Movie Money," a single-reel Vitagraph comedy. The action of the picture is fast, and Charles Dickson, the director, succeeded in keeping the interest from lagging. This is a picture which should send an average audience into spasms of hilarity. One of the particularly comical incidents occurs when Daniels, in search of some money he had lost, pulls a jail from its moorings with the aid of a "fliver." The jail, in which two convicts are having a game of pinochle, jolts over a box of dynamite and is shattered by a great explosion. After the smoke has cleared away, the gamblers are still seen playing their hands, unconscious of the disturbance. After a great deal of trouble, Daniels finds his money only to discover that it is confederate or "stage money." C. Graham Baker wrote the story.

ETHEL TEARE WITH "HAM."

In response to an insistent demand from exhibitors and fans following the "Ham" comedies that Ethel Teare be returned to that combination. Kalem last week transferred Ethel Teare to the Hollywood studio and work was started on "Ham's Whirlwind Finish" with the reunited trio in the principal parts. Kalem's decision to make this radical move, in view of the fact that Ethel Teare has been unusually successful as an individual star for a year, was hastened by the realization of the certain popularity that will come to such a three-star combination.

In "Ham's Whirlwind Finish," Ham and Bud are appointed official cooks in the construction camp kitchen, but their life as purveyors of spaghetti and vino is shortlived. Their passing is hastened by a flirtation with Ethel, the sweetheart of the gang's leader. From then on to "the whirlwind finish" life is one exciting thing after another for Ham and Bud, with dynamite the chief ingredient of the plot.

B. S. Moss Enters the Production Field

Proposes to Put Out One Feature a Month—Later Will Increase to One a Week

DURING the past week a new factor has loomed up upon the motion picture horizon in the person of B. S. Moss, who announces that he is about to take an aggressive and active part in the production of motion pictures. Mr. Moss naturally is a keen judge of the money making value of feature pictures, inasmuch as the chain of theaters which he controls will have the first run on all of his productions.

"It stands to reason," said Mr. Moss, in discussing his plans for the future, "that I would not dream of distributing a picture unless I was convinced that it would prove profitable in my own houses. Being myself an exhibitor and having my own interests to conserve, the B. S. Moss pictures naturally will be of a class that will insure showmen the best quality of photo dramas which it is possible to produce.

"The customary transaction of selling a man a picture for a certain territory was to sell him the picture and then forget all about him. We intend to do this differently, and that is the reason we have hit upon the one-a-month proposition.

"As previously stated, we will advertise continually in the trade papers and create a demand for our merchandise, which will be more easily saleable when the state right man comes to the exhibitor for business. It is also our purpose to show at least four of the finished pictures to every customer before he need tie up for the twelve features.

"My debut into the production field has not been made hastily. The pictures which I intend to put before the public are each and everyone of them carefully culled from the best available now upon the market. It has been my aim in selecting these pictures to choose those that offer the widest diversity in the fields of interest.

"For instance, the first picture which we will release is entitled 'In the Hands of the Law,' by the celebrated author, William O. H. Hurst. This picture deals with the much-discussed subject of circumstantial evidence, and before an audience composed of Police Commissioner Woods, Theodore Rosseau, secretary to Mayor Mitchel, and a selected body of legislators, received their strong endorsement as an example of the fact that occasionally the law can err."

The second picture will be "Boots and Saddles," based on Eugene Walter's famous play. The action takes place today on the Mexican border. A great big stirring picture, with great silhouettes of thousands of soldiers in battle, and all the activity of a bustling campaign.

Other productions contemplated are "The Power of Evil," by George Bronson Howard; "The Woman Redeemed," starring Marie Empress; "One Hour," "One Day" and "Rosedale."

It is the intention of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, beginning in September, to release a feature each month, each feature to be headed by a noted star. Mr. Moss plans later on to construct a studio and place upon the market multiple-reel features of marked quality on a one-a-week basis.

All productions will be issued on the state right plan.

POWELL MAY VISIT SCREEN CLUBS.

Frank Powell, the noted photoplay director and the president of the film producing company which bears his name, is a charter member of the Screen Club, New York's famous organization of motion picture producers and actors. To Mr. Powell belongs the honor of originating the name of this club and in recognition of this signal service has been one of its board of governors since the inception of the organization.

This club was organized about three years ago with a very small representation among the film actors and has been so successful that under the able management of such men as Mr. Powell and others that today it has a membership exceeding 500 of the best-known artists of the screen.

During the past year numerous other clubs have been formed throughout the country under the same name as the New York organization, and as a great many invitations have been received by Mr. Powell from the presidents of these organizations to visit them, he has decided to devote part of his well-earned vacation in the cities represented by these clubs.

As the original Screen Club has been so successful, Mr. Powell will, no doubt, be called upon to give a number of talks relative to the method of procedure used by his organization and which could be used to advantage by the minor clubs.

YORKE FILM STUDIO OPENED.

The Yorke Film Corporation, producers for the Metro program of Harold Lockwood-May Allison features, has located in the studio and offices at No. 1329 Gordon street, Hollywood, California. The studio, which was obtained by Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke corporation, was formerly occupied by the Nevada Pictures Company.

The company of players had left New York but a few days after Mr. Balshofer, and they were surprised and delighted to find on their arrival that everything was in readiness. Immediately the filming of "Mister 44," a picturization of the novel by E. J. Rath, was begun. Rath is also the author of the book from which "The River of Romance," a new Metro release, was made. The latter production was the first to be directed for Metro by Henry Otto.

The party that traveled from New York to the coast included Mr. Lockwood, Miss Allison, Mrs. Allison, Director Henry Otto and his assistant, Bennett Moulter; Lester Cuneo, heavy leading man; Antonio Gaudio, cameraman; Abraham Cantor, assistant to Mr. Balshofer, and Ben H. Grimm, publicity representative.

COLONIAL EQUIPPED BY P. T. E. CO.

A. C. Lewis, proprietor of the Colonial theater, Seaside Park, New Jersey, turned over his new theater to The Picture Theater Equipment Co., and demanded the best projection results be obtained for him.

They sent one of their projection engineers who went over the theater thoroughly and scientifically and suggested various items.

Mr. Lewis purchased from the Picture Theater Equipment Co. two Powers 6 B machines with Powers Inductor, Minusa Gold Fibre Screen and self stretching frame, and the famous Piteco lenses.

To say Mr. Lewis is satisfied would be putting it in a mild way. The projection is perfect, same having been attended to by the Picture Theater Equipment Company's expert who was on the job.

The theater seats about 500 and was built by Mr. Lewis who is a new exhibitor with the right idea.

CLIFFORD IN NEW HORSLEY COMPANY.

William Clifford, who during the past six months has been seen in Centaur features of the David Horsley productions as co-star with Margaret Gibson, will in the future be starred alone in Horsley-Mutual dramas of the one and two-reel length.

Mr. Clifford is now at work on his first story under the new management and it is of the one-reel length in which a number of the famous Bostock wild pumas will be prominently seen. A new company has been formed to support the star, such well known players as Jessie Burnett, Al D. Blake and Victor Rottman being included.

Alvin J. Neitz, for a long period assistant director of the Gibson-Clifford Company, has been elevated to the directorship of the new company and he is ably assisted by David Allen, one of the screen's most popular character actors, who has been identified with the David Horsley studios for a period extending over more than a year.

BILLY RICE'S WIDOW IN PICTURES.

Mrs. Blanche Rice, the widow of the late Billy Rice, the famous minstrel and comedian, is in "God's Half Acre," the Metro-Rolfe motion picture in which Mabel Taliaferro is the star. In her youth Mrs. Rice was a protege of the famous singer, Parepa Rosa. Mme. Rosa wanted to adopt her and educate her for grand opera, but the girl's marriage to the comedian caused her to give up all thought of a career for twenty-six years.

Eugene Strong

EUGENE STRONG, who is cast as Robert Clayton, the artist, in the forthcoming 16 episodes serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery," by the Consolidated Film Corporation, is one of the most popular matinee idols of stage or screen. Mr. Strong has an enviable record on the stage, where he became a favorite through the portrayal of juvenile parts. For six years he was in stock in the west, and then appeared for two years in the leading role of "The Virginians."

Eugene Strong.

He appeared in a Paul Armstrong sketch, "To Save One Girl," on a forty-week vaudeville tour, supporting Catherine Calvert, Mr. Armstrong's wife. His first big success in the pictures was in the juvenile lead in "The Man Inside," in which he supported Edwin Stevens.

Mr. Strong is tall, handsome and athletic and a perfect type of matinee idol. In "The Crimson Stain Mystery," as an artist, he will be seen in many exceptionally powerful scenes with Olga Olonova, the latest Russian vampire find, who will appear in connection with her work, as the artist's model.

The studio scenes in "The Crimson Stain Mystery" promise to be the most daring yet attempted on the screen, and they will give Mr. Strong an opportunity to put into full play his magnificent talents as an actor.

EASTERN PLAYERS REACH UNIVERSAL CITY.

Following the announcement made by President Carl Laemmle and Vice-president and General-Manager H. O. Davis of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company the Eastern players and directors of the company are gradually being transferred to the Pacific Coast studios at Universal City. Practically every day sees a new arrival at the film capital, where over thirty companies are now producing photoplays.

One of the first to arrive was Director Stuart Paton, with his leading man, Allen Holubar; the leading lady, Jane Gail; Dorothy Phillips, Wm. DeGrasse, M. F. Murphy, assistant director; Joseph Gerrard and Wm. Welch.

Later arrivals include Director William Garwood, Director David LeBrandt, Ben Wilson, Irene Hunt, Edith Roberts, Howard Crampton, Lillian Concord, Gertrude Cameron and Hobart Henley.

HALE AN AVIATOR.

Creighton Hale, now starring in the feature pictures of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., is the only actor appearing on the screen or legitimate stage who has qualified and become a member of the Aero Club of America. Mr. Hale addressed the Harlem Board of Trade on the adaptability of the aeroplane in modern warfare and succeeded in arousing their enthusiasm to the extent that it is rumored they contemplate donating to the United States Government a fully-equipped aeroplane to be used at the discretion of its aviation branch.

Mr. Hale has agreed to form an Aviation Corps among his co-workers in the motion picture industry, and in the event of trouble between this country and any foreign nation Mr. Hale assured the Board of Trade that he would be willing to leave for the front at any time.

HARVARD FILM CORPORATION MOVES.

The Harvard Film Corporation has moved from 231-233 Tenth avenue to the new film building at 729 Seventh avenue, where it has installed an up-to-date film and developing plant which is modern in every particular. All the Unity Sales Corporation work will be done by the Harvard, of which J. T. Reardon is president.

GAUMONT ISSUES THREE SINGLE-REELS FOR FIRST WEEK IN AUGUST.

There are no photodramas scheduled for release by Gaumont for the first week in August, that company confining its Mutual pictures to three single-reels. These are "See America First," with the Gaumont Kartoon Komics; "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, and the Mutual Weekly. As it is the aim to keep the "Reel Life" subjects up to date, no announcement has yet been made of the features which will enliven this reel when it is released July 30. "Reel Life" bears the same relationship to a magazine that the Mutual Weekly does to a newspaper, and its editor often holds his program until the last minute in order to secure the pick of the market for his spectators.

"See America First" offers an intensely interesting city August 2. This is Philadelphia, rich in Colonial and revolutionary sites, suitable for the screen.

LAEMMLE CONTINUES SALARIES OF SOLDIER EMPLOYEES.

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. announces that the salaries of two of his factory employees, H. Manhaken and Edward Carey, who went to the front with their regiments, will be paid during their absence to their relatives.

Mr. Manhaken and Mr. Carey were both employed in the laboratories of the Universal at Fort Lee, Mr. Manhaken in the perforating department and Mr. Carey in the negative polishing department. Both Universal employees were members of Company F, Fifth Regiment, New Jersey Infantry, when the mobilization order called them away from their work.

RALPH HERZ PRODUCING ONE REEL COMEDIES FOR METRO.

Ralph Herz, the well known comedian, who recently made his debut on the Metro Program in "The Purple Lady," supported by Irene Howley, has been engaged to appear in one-reel comedies for Metro. They will be produced by the Rolma Film Corporation and one comedy will be released every week. Mr. Herz has already begun work on the first subject which is called "The Lady Killer." It was written by Edward McWade, and is being produced under the direction of "Billy" Quirk, the popular comedian, who recently joined the directing forces.

JEROME BEATTY WITH THANHOUSER.

Jerome Beatty, a newspaper and magazine writer, who has had wide experience in publicity work, has been made director of publicity for the Thanhouser Film Corporation at New Rochelle, N. Y. Mr. Beatty handled the newspaper publicity for Essanay's "The Strange Case of Mary Page." Before that he was a baseball writer on the New York Tribune. Mr. Beatty has had newspaper experience in New York, Washington, Kansas City, New Orleans and Los Angeles.

J. A. BERST VISITS CHICAGO EXPOSITION.

J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, showed his appreciation of the importance of the Chicago exposition by leaving on Saturday night for Chicago, where he spent Monday. In response to the urgent request of the exposition officials and many exhibitors, he took with him Pearl White, the Pathe star, who was at the Pathe exhibit during Monday, and distributed souvenir mirrors and postcards bearing her photograph.

PETE SCHMID TAKES VACATION.

Pete Schmid, the Morosco-Pallas P. A., whispered farewell to Broadway last Friday evening and departed on his annual camping trip. When last seen, Pete was speeding west on Forty-second street with a canoe paddle, fishing tackle and a mass of other vacation material squeezed under each arm. The "Terrible Teuton" expects to spend the next two weeks among the unexplored regions of Lake George and stated that his outfit contained nothing that resembles a razor blade or a stiff collar. He also boasted that he would not look at a newspaper for fourteen days.

LAST PATHE'S "WHO'S GUILTY?" AUGUST 7.

Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series has proven to be such a strong drawing card that many exhibitors have written expressing their regret that there will be only fourteen episodes. The last one, "The Irony of Justice," will be released on August 7.

Big Theater Deal In Bay State

Lord, Horstmann and Howard Retire from Olympia Corporation—Gordon and Shoolman, President and Treasurer

THE biggest change in management and control of the moving picture business in New England has just been effected through the retirement from the management and control of the Olympia Theaters, Inc., of Arthur E. Lord, of Lynn, as general manager, Ernest H. Horstmann, of Salem, director, and Frank Howard, the New England pioneer. The three have sold their holdings, said to approximate 40 per cent. of the stock of the Olympia Theaters and valued at more than $2,000,000.

The Olympia Theaters, Inc., operate two of the biggest moving picture and vaudeville houses in Boston proper, and one each in Lynn, New Haven, New Bedford, Gloucester and Chelsea. They are all known as the Olympia theaters and are the largest and most luxuriously appointed of the moving picture houses of New England.

The management and control of these theaters now passes into the hands of Nathan T. Gordon, president, and Max Shoolman, treasurer, of the corporation. They own more than 80 per cent. of the stock through the new deal which has just been effected by the parties interested at a meeting of the Olympia Theaters, Inc., at the Olympia Building, 3 Tremont Row.

The new directorate of the corporation is George V. Crocker, Gerald G. E. Street, Attorney General Henry C. Attwill, Hiram E. Miller and Lee M. Friedman.

Dissensions within the past few months are said to have prompted mutual "buy or sell" demands among the former directorate of the Olympia Theaters ownership. Technically, the transferred holdings were acquired by the Puritan Trust Company and the Commonwealth Trust Company, of Boston, partly paid for in cash, the remainder in short-time notes. One note for $238,000, running to Lord, Horstmann and Howard, which has been filed in Salem, affects the theaters in Lynn and Gloucester. The new management is expected to add a new house to its string near Central Square, Cambridge.

Mr. Lord has been the manager of the Olympia theaters for some time, and under his direction they have prospered and become the leading theaters of Boston for combined vaudeville and moving pictures. Mr. Horstmann has been in general charge of the selection of films for the various theaters. Mr. Howard has been a powerful asset of the corporation through his pioneering of the moving picture industry in New England.

The story of Mr. Howard's rise in the moving picture business was told in the Convention Number of the Moving Picture World. Messrs. Lord and Horstmann are also pioneers of the business in this section. They started business in the Penny Arcade filled with coin-in-the-slot machines in Central avenue, Lynn, about ten years ago. They prospered and put in the nickel-in-the-slot moving pictures. About six years ago they got in touch with the Howard and Gordon interests, with the result that a chain of moving picture houses were built up. The two in Boston are the largest houses in the city devoted to vaudeville and moving pictures exclusively and are valued at over $1,000,000 apiece.

The change of interests will have no immediate effect upon the policy and business of the Olympia Theaters, Inc., as they now stand. W. H. F.

More Copyright Legislation Before Congress

New Amendment Provides for Registration of Film by Cuttings—Relief to Manufacturers

THE Senate Committee on Patents now has under consideration an amendment to the Copyright Law providing for the entry and registration of film by sample. The section reads to amend Section 12, of the Act of 1909 to read:

Provided, however, That in the case of any work referred to in this section wherein copyright has been secured by publication of the work with notice of copyright, which by reason of its character, bulk, fragility, or because of dangerous ingredients cannot expediently be filed, the register of copyrights may determine that there shall be deposited, in lieu of two complete copies of such work, such identifying photographs or prints, together with such written or printed descriptions of the work as he shall find sufficient to identify it: And provided further, That in the case of motion picture photoplays and motion pictures other than photoplays, whenever deposit has been made as required by the provisions of the act of Congress (Public, No. 303) approved August 24, 1912, and registration has been secured thereunder, such deposit and registration shall hereafter be held to be sufficient, and shall exempt the copyright proprietor from the deposit of two complete copies of such photoplay or motion picture if it is later reproduced in copies for sale, and the provisions of the amendatory act of August 24, 1912, are hereby made to apply to motion picture photoplays and motion pictures other than photoplays that have been reproduced in copies for sale or otherwise published.

Section 12 is that clause which provides that one or two copies of material intended for copyright shall be deposited with the Register of Copyrights and by him turned over to the Librarian of Congress for the Library of Congress or affiliations. This section has already been amended to provide that film not issued in copies for sale may be registered for identification by means of a typewritten or printed description and cuttings from the film, though two full copies of the reel must be sent where the prints are to be sold.

It is provided, however, that articles registered which are too bulky for storage and are not wanted for preservation may be returned to the owner of the copyright after being marked for identification, and this has been done in the case of most film releases entered for copyright. Some manufacturers, however, have entered under "copies not offered for sale," which forms an imperfect protection. Those who offer the two full copies for entry, to protect their registration, must preserve these copies, and their identifying marks. The purpose of the bill is to relieve the manufacturers of the necessity for sending prints to Washington only to have them returned in due course, and to give full and complete copyright protection on a description and photographs instead of requiring cuttings from the actual film or complete copies. It is merely a move in line with the general aim of the Register of Copyrights, Thorvald Solberg, to give the fullest and most complete service with the least expenditure of red tape. It will save the manufacturers much money in shipping charges, relieve the Copyright office of the menace of carelessly stored film and give a definite protection in the simplest form of entry. The bill also covers lithographic posters and similar material.

It is favorably considered by the Senate Committee and will doubtless become a law.

SELIG'S GENERAL FILM RELEASES.

"The Gold Ship" is the title of the Selig Special to be released through regular service of the General Film Company on Monday, August 7. "The Gold Ship" tells the story of the high seas, of a vessel laden with gold, of the desperate battle of the ship's master, a girl and a crippled boy to save the cargo and circumvent the plot of mutineers. In this beautiful production Harry Mestayer, Edith Johnson and Sidney Smith are featured. James Oliver Curwood wrote the story.

William N. Selig, continuing his policy of releasing only picture play dramas and comedies of highest worth, announces for regular release in General Film service on Monday, August 14, a gripping drama in three reels entitled "The Germ of Mystery." This drama is most unusual in plot, having to do with the mysterious death of a manufacturer of high explosives who succumbs to the bite of a poisonous spider. Fritzi Brunette, Frank Clark and Guy Oliver star in this production.

"A Bear of a Story" is another of the Selig western farce comedies, featuring Tom Mix. A real live bear is featured in an unusual way and the action will cause sincere merriment.

EMERSON GOES TO FAMOUS PLAYERS.

John Emerson, who has been directing Triangle films, has joined the Famous Players' staff, to direct a series of pictures starring Mary Pickford. The first, which goes into rehearsal Monday, is an East Indian story.

"The Same Old Thing"

It's a Wise Script Writer Who Can Recognize His Brain Child on the Screen

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

"THE same old thing," "along familiar lines," "deals with a familiar theme," are lines occurring so frequently in film criticisms that the readers are almost convinced that manufacturers are right when they say that they cannot get good stories. They seem to be willing to pay big money, but no matter what they pay, the screened result is strangely familiar.

It has been the constant claim of this writer that the studio staff edits the originality out of all stories in their reconstructions. This has largely been an unsupported statement, though any manufacturer has only to compare the screened results with the original scripts to see for himself that the statement is true, but to argue with fact, not merely statement, let us take a recent release, put out under the title of "She Won a Prize."

This story is chosen merely because this writer is named as the author and still has the original carbon. "Still has" is used advisedly, for the story was written three years ago and a check in payment was entered June 14, 1913. The original title was "Martha's Legacy."

The story of this release, as given by the company is as follows:

> All that glitters may not be gold—but Molly Moore, "steno" to Charles Adams, certainly does glitter as if she had gold, when she appears at Lakewood. After winning $1,000 in a scenario contest, Molly decides to have a good time. With the aid of a blonde wig, the make-up box and some swell clothes, she makes a noise like an heiress and gets away with it. Her boss comes to Lakewood and fails to recognize her in her finery. When the boss' fiancee becomes infatuated with a count and returns his engagement ring, Molly tries to console him and he becomes interested in her. Later, Molly exposes the count as a waiter and he does as much for her by removing her wig and "showing her up." Back in the office once more, Adams sees that Molly has supplanted his former fiancee in his affections and she gladly accepts a second-hand engagement ring.

Here we have all of the familiar ingredients. There is the fictitious count, who proves to be a waiter, which has probably been used in nearly a thousand stories in the past ten years. There is the proud, title-hunting heiress, the blonde wig and all the rest of the stuff that has been done to death. Probability is fractured and the happy ending gained only through loss of convincingness. Most of the stuff was stale a great deal more than three years ago.

But the story is so different from the original script that it is almost possible to collect damages for the use of the author's name on such rot. The story is not at all the one that was sold for twenty dollars on the supposition that they would make a half reel out of the twenty-two scene play. The original synopsis read:

> Martha Murtha has a grouchy boss. She wins a $1,000 prize in a newspaper contest and determines to spend it all at once in having the time of her life. She resigns with two seconds' notice, lays in some gowns and blossoms out at a resort as Miss Montmorenci. The boss flees from a succession of new typists and comes to rest at the same hotel. The dashy Miss Montmorenci is very different from the rather dowdy Martha of the office, and, while her face seems familiar, he does not recognize her. He falls in love but Martha refuses his offer of marriage. She doesn't figure quite right and finds that she owes the hotel $35 more than she has left. She makes a clean breast to the boss, borrows the money from him and pays the bill. She goes back to the office and pays back the debt. It has cost her $1,050, but she had a perfectly good time, and it was worth it. You thought she was going to marry the boss, after all, didn't you? Well, she doesn't. That's where it is unusual—and life-like.

The entire charm of the story, such as it was, rose from the unusualness of it. The girl did not win a scenario contest, but a literary contest of the sort then popular. She did not buy a blonde wig that would have gotten her into trouble the moment she put it on. Not being an idiot, she knew that a good hair-dresser was better than a wig maker. She did not, for that matter, try to disguise herself. She had no reason for assuming a disguise. She was not a fugitive from justice nor was she trying to leave behind her an unsavory past. She assumed the name of Montmorenci merely because the high-sounding name better accorded with her pretty dresses. The former employer did not recognize her clearly because he was deceived by the name and the changed appearance of the girl. There was no waiter of any sort let alone one masquerading as a French Count, nor was there any heiress to muss things up. It was a simple little story of a tired little stenographer who had a good time and was content to pay the price. It was human and convincing. The rewrite man simply didn't have sense enough to see that it was an unusual story. He slapped in the old "sure fire hokum," and thought he was improving the story. Instead, he merely made it like all the rest because he knew no better. He could have written as good a story himself because he made no use whatever of the originality given him.

This writer is not speaking in anger because his story has been mussed up. He is used to it. One reel turned out last summer led the Dramatic Mirror reviewer to remark that "probably the author knows what he wrote," wherein he erred, for not even the author knew what it was all about when three subjects were crowded into one reel. This discussion of this particular release is made merely because the carbon was at hand. What was done to this story has been done to 98 per cent. of releases from all companies. So deeply rooted is the manufacturer's belief in the need for reconstruction that it is seldom that stories are made from the author's script, even when a practical working script is supplied. They must be reconstructed or there would be no excuse for the reconstructors, and between the reconstructor, the director and the cutting man, the author's chance of geting over is represented by a minus sign. It is like hiring some famous mural artist to make a ceiling and then letting a house painter do it over with a large brush and the material left over from some other job. Until good stories are both bought and made, there is small hope that we shall emerge from the present Slough of Despond.

Linda A. Griffith.

LINDA A. GRIFFITH, now starring in the first feature photoplays of the Frank Powell Productions, was born in San Francisco. She established quite a reputation as a child actress, appearing in amateur theatricals and later joined the old Alcazar stock company of the city, which has produced many of the greatest legitimate stars of the stage.

Linda A. Griffith.

She appeared as ingenue for Florence Roberts and Margaret Anglin, and shortly afterward came to New York as a refugee out of the disastrous San Francisco earthquake and fire, in which all her material possessions went up in smoke. After leaving the coast she joined Thomas Dixon's "The Only Woman," with whom she remained until her advent into the motion picture world, with the old Biograph Company.

In the summer of 1908 she played the female lead in "An Adventurous Dolly," the first picture produced by David Wark Griffith for that company and through which she became known as one of the "Biograph Girls." After four years with Biograph she rested a year traveling in Europe and while there took part in the Gaumont film of the flight by areoplane of the late Harriet Quimby, from England to France. Upon her return to this country she joined the Kinemacolor Co. of America and was featured in such productions as "The Scarlet Letter," "Everyman," "As the Candle Burns" and many others. When Kinemacolor stopped producing she rejoined Biograph, being featured in K & E productions of "Beverly of Graustark," "The Wife," "A Fair Rebel," "The Stampede" and numerous other features.

She has written many scenarios and numerous articles for Leslie's Weekly and at present is writing a series of articles for "Film Fun" on early Biograph days, recounting the experiences of many of the moving picture stars of to-day who began their careers with the old Biograph.

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

ELABORATE PRODUCTION STAGED BY UNIVERSAL

Georgeous Oriental City Being Built at Universal Pacific Coast Studios.

"TWENTY Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," a twelve-reel photo drama from the story of Jules Verne, is now being produced at Universal City. For more than a year Director Stuart Paton has been engaged in filming scenes for this elaborate film spectacle.

A number of the scenes were made several months ago at the Bahama Islands. There Director Paton invented a cinematographic submarine vessel and pictures were taken along the ocean bed where thrilling episodes among the coral caves in the vast seaweed gardens were enacted by players garbed as divers.

Director Paton is now producing at the West Coast studios of the big U organization the sequel to this marine story and for the scenes is building a most wonderful East Indian city. A magnificent Hindu temple with gorgeous minarets, domes and columns have been completed this week. This beautiful massive structure is part of the Oriental metropolis, the cost of which, it has been estimated, will exceed one hundred thousand dollars.

The Hindu city, where from two to three thousand supernumeraries will be used in many of the scenes, is really a wonderful creation of architectural art and has, besides the great temple, many two-story buildings and a massive gateway and adjoining battlements. Within the walls of this city many sanguinary engagements will be staged between the Hindus and British soldiery.

The work of constructing this elaborate set has been achieved under the supervision of H. H. Barter, technical director of the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who, with Frank D. Ormston, art director, designed the Oriental buildings. Technical Director Barter has been ably aided by his assistant, James Milburn, who is well known as an artistic builder throughout the Pacific Coast.

In view of the fact that several of the larger buildings, during the filming of many spectacular scenes, will have to carry the weight of from five hundred to one thousand men, General Manager Davis instructed the builders to "put them up to stay," and, as orders have been carried out to the letter, these structures have been built as solidly as human hands could make them.

Jane Gail portrays the part of the heroine in this submarine drama, with Allen Holubar and Matt Moore as leading man, while other important roles are enacted by Joseph Girard, William Welsh and Lois Alexander.

Associated with Director Paton in the production of the Hindu scenes is G. F. E. Samuel, a native of India and an authority on Hindu lore, who supervised the sets and costumes so that all these accessories shall be strictly correct.

Eugene Gaudio, the chief camera man of the feature, risked his life many times at the Bahamas, while the assistant director, Martin Murphy, has also won much renown for his daring submarine exploits in aiding Director Paton.

DOROTHY GISH SAVES NATALIE TALMADGE FROM DROWNING.

Plucky Fine Arts Girl Plunges in Turbulent Waters to Rescue Sister of Constance and Norma Talmadge.

Dorothy Gish, the popular Fine Arts star, is quite a heroine this week. She rescued Natalie Talmadge from drowning.

Dorothy was working in a scene for "Gretchen Blunders In," directed by the Bronklin Brothers. The company was taking scenes in a steam launch about a mile from San Pedro Harbor. Dorothy was going through some antics near the bow of the boat with the cameraman catching the action. Natalie Talmadge was awaiting her cue to dash into the scene when the boat gave a lurch and she was precipitated into the water. Without a moment's hesitation, Dorothy Gish plunged headlong from the boat and struck out for Miss Talmadge. Miss Gish, upon receiving Miss Talmadge (who cannot swim) turned over on her back and, holding the helpless girl with one hand, struck out for the launch, which had been stopped. She was met by the masculine members of the company and the two young women were lifted back into the boat.

In a short time both the girls were completely recovered from their impromptu plunge and none the worse for their experience. "Gee, it spoiled my make-up" was the only comment offered by Miss Gish. The scene was retaken the following day.

LOS ANGELES AS "LEGITIMATE" THEATER CENTER WILL BE SECOND ONLY TO NEW YORK.

Cort-Morris Circuit to Open Offices Here for New Vaudeville Combine.

With the departure Sunday last week of John Cort and William Morris on a rapid tour of their newly-acquired theaters, which will form the new Cort-Morris vaudeville circuit, Los Angeles became one of the most important vaudeville booking centers of the country.

Headquarters of the Cort-Morris circuit will be established in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. Heretofore all vaudeville booking houses on the coast have been located in San Francisco.

Before leaving, Cort and Morris secured a suite of four rooms on the second floor of the Majestic Theater Building. These will be opened on the first of August as the western booking offices of the new circuit.

Cort and Morris stated that they had picked Los Angeles for their western headquarters because the producing activities of Oliver Morosco had placed Los Angeles second only to New York as a theatrical producing center, and, because of the pick of high-class professional people to be found here in moving pictures who will be selected for vaudeville as their contracts with the film makers run out.

In behalf of Cort and Morris, Oliver Morosco stated in an interview to the press that the policy of the new circuit will be three performances daily, one in the afternoon and two at night, the first night performance beginning earlier than the usual theater time and letting out at 9:45.

The style of performances will be as follows: A star will head each bill and there will be an entirely new show every week. Each bill will travel as a road show, stopping for a full week in each city of the circuit.

It is stated that some of the biggest vaudeville stars in the country, who will be announced later, have already signed contracts for the new circuit. The Cort houses in every city west of Chicago will be used by the new circuit and in Los Angeles an Oliver Morosco theater will house the vaudeville.

In New York William Morris houses will be used and every big city in the east has already been covered by affiliation with one of the best known theatrical firms in the country.

UNIVERSAL MEN FORM REGIMENT.

Sixty Braves From Big "U" Plant Organize a Regiment of Service Men—Ready to Go to Front if Needed.

Considering the fact that the coast would be left practically without military protection should our troops be called out, a body of public-spirited men, all of whom have known active service, organized a regiment of service men. The regiment numbers about 1,000 men, about sixtv of whom are from Universal City, and are the organizers. While it is the intention to have as many as possible who have known active service the regiment will not be limited to such. Through the courtesy of the Hollywood Board of Trade the recruiting officers will be stationed there twice a week and will be open for any strong willing men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five. For service men the age will be stretched.

Dr. Mace of Universal City is the examining physician. Just at present the officers are busily engaged in "brushing up" in military tactics.

The entire regiment is prepared to leave on a minute's notice should the call come and is prepared to do real work.

"The Daughter of the Don" to Have Initial Presentation at Majestic Theater.

"The Daughter of the Don," the ten-reel historic drama of California, completed about six weeks ago by the Monrovia Feature Film Company, will have its premier in Los Angeles at the Majestic theater, Sunday night, August 13. The company has previously produced "The Argonauts of California," also a ten-reel production and which had its initial presentation at the Columbia theater in San Francisco, June 18.

Winfield Hogaboom, the California newspaper and magazine writer, wrote the scenarios to these big feature productions.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Dainty Mollie Malone has been appointed leading lady of George Cochrane's Universal Company. Miss Malone is nineteen years of age and her first engagement in motion pictures was three years ago with the Western Vitagraph Company, where she played leads. She next accepted an engagement with the Lubin Company and later went to the Lasky Feature Play Company.

Previous to entering pictures Miss Malone traveled extensively in America and Mexico and took a trip around the world.

Mrs. Eugenie Magnus Ingleton arrived at Universal City this week from New York to co-operate with Eugene B. Lewis in the conduct of the scenario department of the Big U organization.

Mrs. Ingleton has had a long experience as an actress, newspaper woman and playwright, both in Europe and the United States. She was in Johannesberg and Pretoria during the Boer war, while acting as leading woman for the late Charles Arnold of the Strand theater, London, and contributed articles while there to the Transvaal papers. She also served as nurse in the British army.

Mrs. Ingleton wrote and produced the Chinese opera, entitled "The Willow Pattern Plate," at the Strand theater, London and the Fifth Avenue theater in New York, and another opera entitled "Aphrodite" will also be produced shortly.

"Silent Sue," a three-act comedy by Mrs. Ingleton, in which Mollie McIntyre, star of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," will play the title role, is now being rehearsed in New York and will soon have its premier.

Director A. W. Rice of the Universal Company left for Bear Valley this week, where he will remain for over a month with his company of players including Jane Bernoudy, George Pearce and James F. Farley.

Among the stories he will film is a two-reeler entitled "The Circuit Rider," by Earl R. Hewitt of the Universal City scenario staff.

Ella Hall, Universal star, will appear at Clune's Broadway on Thursday afternoon this week and present her many screen friends with a beautiful photograph of herself.

Tully Marshall and Bessie Love are being featured in a new Fine Arts play written by Bernard McConville, entitled "Two Waifs." Some of the scenes are being filmed in a juvenile court and to add realism to the production two probation officers of the Los Angeles Juvenile Court have been engaged to assist in staging the court proceedings. The cast includes Ralph Lewis, Frank Bennett and the Fine Arts kiddies, George Stone, Violet Radcliffe and Carmen De Rue. The play is directed by C. M. and S. A. Franklin.

Bennie Zeidman, the smallest press agent in captivity, tipping the beam at one hundred and one and measuring four feet eleven in his stocking feet, has left Los Angeles for a well-earned vacation in New York.

Prior to his departure Bennie was tendered a banquet by Bernard McConville of the scenario department at the latter's Hollywood bungalow at which more than sixty guests from the different studios were present. De Wolf Hopper acted as master of ceremonies and presented Bennie with a beautiful watch and chain, the gift of the Fine Arts players as a token of their appreciation of the young publicity man's services during his two years' connection with the Fine Arts organization.

Bennie Zeidman.

During the festivities speeches were made by William S. Hart, Roy Sommerville, Chit Withey, George Seigman, Bernard McConville, Kenneth O'Hara and others. Willing, Bentley and Willing, the Orpheum trio, contributed to the musical program of the evening.

Bennie Zeidman left for New York Thursday, July 6, via Salt Lake route and expects to return to the Fine Arts studios in Hollywood in three or four weeks.

We have found the reason for Jack Sherrill's recent sudden departure from Los Angeles with the announcement by the Frohman Amusement Company of Mr. Sherrill's engagement with this New York company. It is to feature young Mr. Sherrill in a forthcoming five-reeler.

Clara Williams is enacting the early scenes of the current Triangle drama by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which she soon will be presented as star. The play is of an Italian nature and Miss Williams is playing the role of a beautiful young daughter of Italy, whose adventures in New York constitute the threads of the plot. Those cast to appear in support of Miss Williams are William Desmond, J. J. Dowling and Nona Thomas. The production is being directed by Reginald Barker.

That hardy American star-director William Russell, after a day of strenuous studio work, motored from Santa Barbara for the express purpose of delivering to his brother, Albert Russell of the Universal, the Alaskan husky "Rags." The latter's reputation for fowl banditry had begun to make the neighborhood of the William Russell ranch an unpleasant one—hence the gift to the Russell brother in Hollywood.. After delivering said gift and covering one-third of the return trip to Santa Barbara, Mr. Russell, looking back, discovered "Rags," tired but joyful. There being nothing left to do but invite the dog into the seat beside him, Russell did it, and together they returned to the ranch, their starting point of eight hours previous.

I have often wondered why the Lasky reception room was the most crowded—this explains.

In order to supply warm lunches to the companies on location they constructed a portable lunch wagon similar to the "soup cannons," used by the German army. This "soup cannon" is pulled by a horse and it is arranged that hot soup, coffee and sandwiches can be hauled over the rough ground without danger of spilling. With this arrangement, several hundred extras can be given a warm lunch between scenes, and hot coffee will be at their disposal continuously. This wagon was especially built for use at the Lasky ranch, where sometimes as many as five or six hundred people are employed at night.

In the new Sturgeon feature, in which George Holt is featured, Mr. Sturgeon required him as part of the character to smoke several cigarettes before the camera's eye. George never smokes, and it took several days to accustom himself to the taste of the weed so that he was able to keep up an appearance of enjoying his smoke for half a hundred feet or so. As soon as each scene was over, George would go to his dressing room to sterilize his mouth and rid it of the tobacco taste.

W. A. S. Douglas, director of production for Pathe, is a coast visitor, having arrived to look after Pathe's interests.

Adelaide Woods, because she offers so unusual a type, owing to her possession of youthful features and prematurely white hair, either is in great demand, or not at all. The former was instanced last week, when she was spoken for by three directors of one company at the same time. The controversy of possession still remains unsettled. Meanwhile Miss Woods vacations.

At the Lasky studio James Young has started on the production of "Unconquered," in which Blanche Sweet is to star, and Walter Long, who will be remembered as playing the negro "Gus" in "The Clansman," has been engaged by the Lasky company for the support of Blanche Sweet in "Unconquered."

Marshal Stedman throws the light on the employment question when he says that there are one hundred extras for every position open at Universal, and there are twenty applicants for every actor's job. Mr. Stedman believes that persons residing in nearby and other cities should be informed that they cannot come to Los Angeles and become rich or famous in motion pictures. There are plenty of people here now to more than fill every position open for many months to come, he says.

"There is about one chance in a thousand that anyone can get a job in pictures now-a-days," says Mr. Stedman. "A person would have to be physically constructed in a most unusual manner to get a hearing at all, unless it would be for only a day or two in a mob scene."

The same condition prevails at all the other studios, only on a smaller scale, according to the employment men.

"God's Country and the Woman," the eight-reel Sturgeon feature with William Duncan, George Holt and Nell Shipman in the leads, is playing this week at Quinn's Superba theater in Los Angeles to big business. This picture has aroused a great deal of interest locally. especially since the company nearly perished in the snows of Big Bear Valley last winter.

Gilbert E. Murdock, one of the most recent playwrights to turn his attention to writing for the screen, is author of a Persian Idyl in which Maud Allen, America's greatest dancer, expects to make her debut in spoken lines this autumn. A Murdock comedy, "To Catch a Thief," is being produced by the Universal.

Little Lena Baskette made evident the Universal Company's wise choice of her by a dancing exhibition, given by her at the recent dinner of the Directors' Association at the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles.

William S. Hart is directing the production of the Mexican border drama in which he will be starred. This is being produced partially at Inceville and partially on the sands of the desert south of El Centro, Cal.

George L. Sargent is making good progress on "The Sable Curse," the first Richard Bennett five-reeler. In the cast are also Rhea Mitchell, George Periolat, Mrs. Bennett, Charles Newton and Mrs. Otto Kluge.

G. E. Jenks, Signal scenario scribbler for the Helen Holmes Company, left Los Angeles for the lumber country near Eureka, Cal., to familiarize himself with locations and conditions in that section for the better production of the Signal-Mutual feature to be staged there following the production of "The Manager of the B. & A."

Director William C. DeMille, of Laskys, will shortly start on the production of "Anton the Terrible," in which Theodore Roberts and Thomas Meighan will be co-starred. Charles Clary has been engaged to play a prominent role in support of Fannie Ward, the Lasky star, in her forthcoming production.

Rollin Sturgeon's vest-pocket Kodak turned detective the other day. He was snapping some odd pictures about the studio and had Mary Anderson pose on a little old chair in the prop. room. Getting adjusted in the pose, Mary unknowingly dropped her pocketbook. An hour or so later, Mary missed the pocketbook and was on the verge of tears as she vainly sought it. The pictures were developed and printed by the next morning, and Mary, looking over hers, was delighted to see the missing pocketbook on the floor under the chair, big as life. Whereupon she hurried to the prop. room and found it all safe. Her reward to the camera was a new roll of films—eagerly donated. Mr. Sturgeon claimed he should have had a reward also, but refused when Miss Anderson laughingly offered him half the contents—one powderpuff, a few hairpins, a receipt for cake, a receipted bill and six pennies.

Edward A. Kaufman is the name to be given screen credit upon the early release of a feature made by a prominent film company in New York. Though Mr. Kaufman, who is a free-lance photo-playwright of Santa Barbara, has had a number of west-coast releases, the above forthcoming feature will be his initial one to have a New York production.

Signs are multiplying that a new race of photoplay writers is arising, as the result of great demand for plays that adhere to the requirements of the screen. Some striking examples of this may be noted in the offerings scheduled for the present week at the various local picture houses. Nevertheless, that the screen is still dependent for many of the best pictures on dramatizations of novels and plays is also clear. It will take a decade, at the least, to perfect a thoroughly skillful school of photo-playwrights, but that the quality of picture stories now written is marveously in advance of that of the stories of only two years ago is also obvious.

"God's Country and the Woman" is at the Superba.

"The Abandonment" is at the Garrick with a Chaplin film.

"The Dupe" is at Woodleys.

"The Phanton" is playing at Tallys.

"The Valiants of Virginia" is at Clunes, while Millers shows "Caprice of the Mountains" and "The Man from Bitter Roots" is at the Alhambra.

The Varied Arts Building of Thomas H. Ince, Culver City plant was completed this week, and is now occupied by the working forces of the photographic and art departments under the supervision of Irvin Willat.

The building is a large two-story fire-proof structure, 31x90 feet, and is conveniently located near the main entrance of the studios. The cutting, assembling, titling and tinting rooms, as well as the "still" departments are on the upper floor, while the main floor is devoted to projecting rooms. All these departments heretofore have been housed in the theater building leased several months ago by Mr. Ince. This, in future will be used for the rehearsal of incidental music accompanying the Ince-Triangle productions.

Charles Giblyn, the Ince-Triangle director, is about to undertake his first visit to New York in eight years. He is going to Buffalo to represent the Los Angeles Shriners as special envoy at the imperial council meeting of the A. A. O. N. M. S., scheduled for July 10 to 17. Giblyn's duties will be to observe the ceremonials adopted by the imperial officers, in order that upon his return to Los Angeles he may be better able to occupy his responsible position of director-general of Al Malaikah Shrine.

Wallace MacDonald, the popular American player, called at the World office this week. Mr. MacDonald stated that he expects to leave for Halifax, Nova Scotia, some time next week where he will visit his mother for about a month, not having seen her for six or seven years.

Sheppard Buys "Fall of a Nation" for Southwest

Purchases Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas and Will Immediately Open Film Exchange at Dallas—New Jersey and W. Va. Sold Also

W. K. SHEPPARD, an exhibitor who has had great success operating houses at Laredo and Brownsville, Tex., walked into the National Drama Corporation office July 12 and planked down a big certified check for "The Fall of a Nation" rights of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. "I've looked over the field of all the great features," he remarked to Ed. Giroux, "and am convinced that the Dixon-Herbert spectacle will prove more popular with the people down our way than any other current offering. They want the big battle scenes, are deeply interested in the soldier life on the border; moreover, they enjoyed so keenly the previous Dixon dramatic stories like 'The Clansman,' 'The Sins of the Father,' 'The Leopard's Spots' and 'The Birth of a Nation' that the coming of a new patriotic spectacle by the same author will be a decidedly sensational event." Ed. Giroux deposited the check to general account, while W. K. Sheppard and Thomas Dixon signed the contract. It was one of the quickest sale transactions in the history of film marketing.

Mr. Sheppard is the hustling type of Southern Alleghany folk that have made good in Texas. Born in Parkersburg, W. Va., where his family are prominent in commercial affairs, he went to the Lone Star State seven years ago. He operated successfully a small motion picture house in Laredo, later became proprietor of a large and modern theater in Brownsville which he equipped with the latest conveniences and made extremely popular. An inkling of the possibilities of big films was afforded to Mr. Sheppard when he had a $1,000 advance sale for "The Birth of a Nation." In fact, he has done capacity business for almost everything of importance that has come his way. He sold out his Southern Texas theater interests last March.

The first step in Mr. Sheppard's southwest campaign will be the establishment of a film exchange in Dallas, Tex. It will be in operation before the first of August. One of the most prominent exchange men of the South will be in charge, and this head office will be plentifully supplied with prints and with every kind of publicity, musical scores, etc. Elaborate runs of "The Fall of a Nation" are planned in Dallas, Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Fort Worth, Houston, Galveston and San Antonio, after which the spectacle will be shown in the smaller towns. As a graceful compliment to the militiamen and regulars now encamped along the Mexican border, the management intends to give early showing of the picture in several of the important border posts and camps. Several hundred of the guardsmen who are protecting Texas against Mexican bandit attack did motion picture duty last winter in the mimic war scenes staged for "The Fall of a Nation."

A wise contractor in his day and generation is F. E. Backer of the Englewood theater, Englewood, N. J., who bought the New Jersey State rights of the film the same morning that Sheppard secured the Southwest. Mr. Backer will take advantage of the crowded August season at the beaches by showing the picture in Atlantic City, Cape May, Asbury Park, Long Branch and other centers. He is also rapidly arranging autumn bookings throughout the principal cities of the State. A third State rights buyer at the National Drama offices last week was R. R. Roberts, who had previously been identified with the purchase of many big features and who acquired the Dixon-Herbert offering for West Virginia. Besides the above transactions, several other important deals for territory have been practically completed and due announcement of them will be made.

Monday, July 24, is the release date of the picture in New England and Greater New York. W. M. Powers left the city July 17 to wait on the New England trade, many of whom have wired their intention to make early bookings. The offices of the National Drama Corporation at 1465 and 1485 Broadway were crowded all last week with New York and Yankee exhibitors arranging for dates. The Corporation is booking this territory direct, and there is a lively scramble to secure first runs.

Berst Active for Hughes Bill

Writes Personal Letter to Exhibitors Asking Their Co-operation—Gives Arguments for Federal Censorship

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, believing thoroughly that Federal cenorship of motion pictures furnishes the only available protection against legalized state and town censorship and convinced that quick action is necessary in order to have the Hughes Bill passed, has sent a letter to every exhibitor on the Pathe mailing list, urging individual effort in the interests of the business. In his letter Mr. Berst gives some strong arguments in favor of the bill. The letter follows:

There will soon be brought before the House of Representatives at Washington the Hughes bill, providing for Federal Censorship of motion pictures. After making a careful study of this bill, I am convinced that it is to the best interests of us all, exhibitors and manufacturers alike, to have it passed. In talking it over with various prominent exhibitors, I have found that they believe as I do in this matter, and feel that each Congressman should be requested by the exhibitors among his constituents to actively aid the hill.

In the first place Federal Censorship means better pictures. At the present time the National Board of Review (formerly known as the National Board of Censors) is passing upon pictures before their release. This enables the manufacturer, if parts of his picture are objected to, to make retakes, to change suh-titles and generally re-edit the film so that its artistic value is not lost but often improved by the change, and so that the story remains logical and interesting. However, the National Board of Review has no power to enforce its decisions and the revised film, though approved by it, has to run the gauntlet of various state and city censoring boards with legal powers. Individual and prejudiced opinions too often prevail on such boards and with the result you are only too familiar. Cuts, both of scenes and titles, are demanded. The local exchange handling pictures locally censored, having no facilities and no time for expert editing, release them with the offending parts eliminated, thus leaving gaps in the stories which greatly lessen their artistic value. Your audiences do not understand this. They merely complain that the pictures are inferior and that "pictures are not so good as they used to be."

Secondly. Federal Censorship would be a good thing from the standpoint of economy. Boards of Censors are now springing up all over the country, all demanding their toll and you, as well as we, must pay. Most of these boards demand a fee for each reel in the possession of the film exchange whether recently released or several months' old. In this last case, it means an expense of thousands of dollars to the distributor. For instance, if the bill providing for State Censorship in New York had not been vetoed by the Governor, censorship fees for this one company alone on films already released and in the possession of our various New York State exchanges, would have amounted to $30,000. If that bill had not been vetoed we would have had to raise the price on all future rentals in order not to conduct our business at a loss.

If we in the industry do not at once take action, there will probably be another bill presented in New York State at the next session of legislature and similar bills in many other states. The tax on the film exchanges will be tremendous, so great, in fact, that several of them will have to go out of business, and with them the exhibitors not able to pay higher rentals.

It is true that the establishment of a Federal Board will not at once eliminate all existing local boards, but it certainly will tend to do so in time. It will be quite feasible to obtain from the higher courts decisions reversing the rulings of the local board objecting to parts of films already approved by the Federal Board, and this will have the effect of proving the uselessness of the local boards and precipitating their disappearance. Again, the fact that there exists such a Federal Board will be the most powerful argument possible against the establishment of additional local boards in states and cities.

We urge you, for our mutual interests, to write your Congressman at once along the lines of the enclosed letter, asking his aid in having the Hughes Bill passed.

FRANK P. DONOVAN JOINS MILO.

Frank P. Donovan this week left for Baltimore, Md., where he will make the comedy and dramatic pictures for the newly formed Milo Pictures Corporation, which has studios in Baltimore and Norfolk, Va.

Many well-known players of the screen will soon join the Milo company, which intends to make big features with big stars for release through the Pathe Exchange. The company is backed by local capitalists and is not selling stock.

The Country Theater, Its Past and Present

By Frank G. Andrews

How Conditions Have Changed and How to Successfully Cope With the New Conditions

IF I were considering opening up a new moving picture theater at the present time I would keep on considering—but I wouldn't open it. The industry is in uncertain shape just now—rather unsteady on its feet; but the clouds will clear presently, I believe, and the business will get down to a more definite basis. I am speaking now of the small town theater, dependent upon a population of 5,000 or less, and it may be that the same logic applies to the cities. The business is overdone. There are too many manufacturers and too many theaters. That's what's the matter with pictures just now—that's one of the things.

Experienced showmen who are familiar with conditions in the small towns tell me that 10 per cent. of the population is a liberal estimate in computing every-night picture-goers. Perhaps 90 per cent. attend pictures once in a while, but only 10 per cent., or less, can be counted on as steady business. That would mean in a town of 3,000 that 300 people can be counted on every night. An exhibitor might swim along on that patronage and make a living, but it is a fact that most towns of 3,000 have two theaters. So you see it is plain that one must close up if the other is to prosper. It doesn't mean that fewer people are patronizing pictures nor does it necessarily mean that interest lags. The only time that two shows paid in a small town was in the day when pictures were exhibited in twenty-dollar-a-month storerooms, under very light operating expenses and with the reels changed only twice a week. Larger rooms have since been provided and one theater in a small town is now enough.

It is remarkable how quickly this transition has been brought about. Only little more than a year ago I was interested with a friend in locating a good country stand. I was as enthusiastic as he. It wasn't a sudden hobby. I knew what I was doing. Today my opinion is far different. It would take a very alluring proposition to tempt me now in the exhibition field, particularly in the small town.

The only way to succeed and establish a permanent business in the smaller places is to build a regular theater that can fight its way against any opposition that might spring up. A small place that makes money is sure to attract attention and lead to competition. Then a newer and larger place opens up—and good night to you and your dump.

How often have I seen this illustrated in the years that I have been interested in pictures. I know a man who opened up a rather nice little place in a city of 40,000. He was practically the pioneer. He cleared $12,000 the first year, $11,000 the second and not less than $8,000 a year in the three following years. He was "in soft"—so he thought.

Along came a company. They leased a place three times as nice as the pioneer had. They raised the price to ten cents and gave pictures that were worth ten cents, while the other fellow stuck to his general program and five-cent admission fee.

You know what I am about to say. The new broom swept clean and I have been told that the new place paid 1,600 per cent. the first year. It is still doing an extensive business because it has kept up to the minute. The other fellow is offering his place for sale and nobody wants it because its future is behind it. There are more people going to pictures in the city referred to just now than ever before, although none of the theaters are making the money they made three or four years ago. Reason is that one theater now seats almost as many as all of them seated a while ago, while operating expenses have greatly increased.

Has the quality of pictures gone back? Are they standing still, as Jesse L. Lasky alleges? Are people tiring? Are pictures a passing fad that attracted for a while simply because of novelty? I can't say, but I'm sure that moving pictures will always be a popular form of entertainment for the masses, because no other form of entertainment can be shown so cheaply.

Let me cite the case of a theater in a Pennsylvania town of 4,000 people and then provide your own answer as to whether or not pictures have "gone back."

This town was lying dormant when the craze took hold of the country. A native with an eye on the main chance seized the old "opry" house at $30 or so a month, and took the General Film program. That was about eight or nine years ago. Today that fellow owns three fine properties in the town and has numerous investments. He's rich.

A year and a half ago he was at the zenith of his successful career. Only a year and a half ago! Today he is not making a cent. And he hasn't now and never has had any opposition. Can you beat that? Now study it out. What's the matter? He has made no change in his policies. He is still using General Film and he still has the awful piano-player that he started in business with. That patronage has fallen off certainly isn't his fault.

You don't have to agree with me, but I'll tell you what I think. I think the whole fault is in the service. Where your patronage depends upon all the people of a town you must have a variety program to satisfy, if not please, all your patrons, because you must satisfy all of them after a fashion if you would make a real success in the small town. You can take the best feature that was ever made and I question whether every person in the audience would be entirely satisfied. "Tess of the Storm Country" is no doubt one of the most pleasing, satisfying and successful stories ever filmed, but I personally have heard intelligent people say they didn't care for it. But show six reels of assorted singles and you are almost sure to please everybody to a degree. A man may find fault with five of the reels, but if he gets one that he likes he thinks the whole show is all right.

There are hundreds of exhibitors, I'm sure, who would go back to one-reelers, but it can't be done—not satisfactorily. There are no one-reel stories today that are worth one's time, compared with those that were manufactured a few years ago. We all know why. The manufacturers are feature-crazy. They have milked the general program of all the stars, all the directors and all the stories. Speaking in a broad way, all that is left for the general program are some ribbon counter boys and department store girls. They are not actors and there is no competent person to direct them. Even the stories are of no account. There used to be virile dramas shown in a single reel. Today you must sit through three, four or five reels to get the same story.

If you think the audiences, in the country as well as the city, don't notice these things you are mistaken. Some fans know almost enough to make pictures, I believe. Only the other night I sat in a theater in front of two women who were regular patrons. Fannie Ward had the center of the screen and was dividing interest with a pet dog—and it certainly was a cute dog. Presently one of the women behind me turned to the other and said: "See how that dog watches the camera!" It was so. Don't you think people in the audience are getting picture-wise? They are becoming almost technical.

I'm running away, though, from my subject. What the country theater needs to bring it back to its pristine glory is a variety program, and the organization that sees this phase in its true light will, I believe, enter a field that will net them more money than the overdone feature field. Features should be held by the country exhibitor as a treat—as a means of making an occasional cleanup. If you advertise features every night they cease to be features—they are just regular things. You advertise each one to the very limit and when you've got one that deserves the best that can be said, you have shot your string and the people fail to give heed.

Same way with manufacturers. Every feature is the most astounding thing known in the history of picture-making. Your attention is called to it in wonderful advertisements printed on colored pages and in inks of brightest hue. You are told not to use the slow-going mails in booking the wonderful production, but to order by telegraph—just as if it would get away before your order could be received.

Personally, such advertisements would steer me away from a feature rather than get me. Too much money is spent in the advertisements and not enough brains put into the picture.

What a smashing truth that was by Director Albert Capellani, printed in the Moving Picture World recently. He said. "If I were asked to make a percentage table on what makes a great picture I should say 50 per cent. story, 30 per cent. star and 20 per cent. director. Judging by the average picture we see today, the percentage table as compiled in the producing company's office would read: 50 per cent. advertising, 40 per cent. star, and 10 per cent. direction, with no story at all."

If I were a small town exhibitor today I'll tell you what I would do. I would show a general program of the best pictures I could get for four nights a week and features for two nights. I wouldn't show features every night, because people who go to theaters every night, as they do in the towns, get tired of them, or at the best fail to think they are getting a treat. And I would try and get good features, not simply five reels of something. I would be as careful as I could not to let any feature disappoint my patrons.

Country exhibitors, in towns of 2,000 up, have been showing nightly for several years. I think that is going to be a thing of the past. Most of them now showing every night are losing money at least three nights a week. Then why show on those three losing nights? You lose money and you detract from your three good nights. If you can make $50 showing three nights a week, why show six nights and make only $40? The good exhibitor is the man who will adjust himself to the changed conditions that arise as they arise, and conditions that confront the picture exhibitor are continually changing in this industry, both in the city and country.

That Universal Program for Week of July 24

A Good Showing, Calculated to Help the Exhibitor to Cash in During the Hot Weather

THE Universal Program for the week of July 24 is led off by the five-reel Red Feather, "Temptation and the Man," in which Hobart Henley, Sydell Dowling and Sydney Bracey are featured. On the same day Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Roberta Wilson will disport in "Art for Art's Sake," a Nestor one-reeler.

On Tuesday, July 25, Alice Howell and Fatty Voss will share comedy honors in the L-Ko three-reel howler, "Lizzie's Lingering Love." They will be followed by "Cross Purposes," a Rex drama, in which J. F. Connely and Jessie Arnold will play the principal roles.

Mary Fuller heads the program of Wednesday, July 28, appearing in the Gold Seal two-reel modern adventure drama, "A Splash of Color." On the same day the Victor comedy, "Just a Few Little Things," with Wallace Beery and Gretchen Lederer providing the fun, will be released. Animated Weekly, No. 30, containing the first views of the infantile plague in New York, will be released on the same date.

"Priscilla's Prisoner," a Big U two-reel rural drama, featuring Cleo Madison and E. V. Mong, will be released by the Universal on Thursday, July 27. On the same day "Won by Valor," an Imp drama, with Sydell Dowling and Sydney Bracey, and the Powers split reel, "Jitney Jack and Gasolena," a comedy cartoon, and "Creating Life from a Dead Leaf," an educational, will be released.

On Friday, July 28, Ben Wilson will head the day's program in "The Circular Room," an Imp two-reel mystery drama. Mr. Wilson will be supported by Edna Hunter and Joe Gerard. "The Circular Room" will be followed by the Big U drama, "A Great Love," in which Norbert Myles and Vola Smith will play the leading roles, and "The Unexpected Scoop," a Nestor comedy, featuring Myrtle Gonzalez.

Harry Carey, considered the most virile depictor of western roles, is featured with Olive Fuller Golden on Saturday, July 29, in the Bison two-reel western drama, "For the Love of a Girl." On the same day Malcolm Blevins and Marjorie Ellison will be seen in the Laemmle drama, "The Mask of Fortune," and Gale Henry and William Franey will do their worst in the Joker comedy, "I've Got Your Number."

On Sunday, July 30, Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby will appear in a Victor two-reel comedy, entitled "The Latest in Vampires." They will be followed by "Mutiny," a tale of life at sea, which will be released under the Imp brand, with Lucille Younge and Jack Nelson playing the leading roles.

During the week of July 24 the thirteenth two-reel episode of the Universal special feature, "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford putting the punch across as usual, will be released.

Christening Children in Indian and White Tribes

Inceville Indian Baby and Minister's Child Christened at Same Ceremony.

LAST week a unique service was held on the camp ground at Inceville when a child of Thomas H. Ince's Thunder Bull was christened by an Episcopal minister. The unique feature was that the minister's own child was christened in the Indian style at the same time. The picture below shows the ceremony at the finish. Rev. Pierson is seen at the left while his wife is standing next to him holding their child, which received the Indian's blessing.

Christening of the Pale-face Baby and the Papoose.

Lillian Read

ALTHOUGH it is not generally known, Lillian Read, the two and a half year old Sarah Bernhardt, appearing in Thomas H. Ince's spectacle, "Civilization," in the Criterion theater, is the daughter of John Park Read, Jr., who is Mr. Ince's personal representative.

Lillian Read.

This is Lillian's debut in the pictures and she is said to be able to register more varied expressions despite her tender years, than many an adult actress. A series of pictures produced from "Civilization," showing her in the attitude of supplication, curiosity, shame, shyness and anger, are creating unusual interest throughout the country, but the most successful emotion that she registers, according to "Civilization's" press agent, is joy at the size of her Saturday check.

The many offers that have come for her exclusive services from different film producers since her success in "Civilization" would make the most seasoned motion picture star a bit envious.

MUTT AND JEFF TWO A WEEK.

Owing to the phenomenal success of Bud Fisher's Mutt & Jeff in animated form, exchanges throughout the country have requested that Mr. Fisher produce two weekly Mutt and Jeff cartoons instead of one, but Mr. Fisher's time is so taken us as to make it a physical impossibility.

Wharton's Making "The Black Stork"

The Two Brothers, Producers of "Mysteries of Myra," Have Begun Work on Another Feature.

AT Ithaca is a most unique motion picture studio. Here it is the Brothers Wharton hold forth. "The Wharton Boys," as they are known professionally, have had a hand in the development of many screen stars whose light has shown most brightly under their direction.

Francis X. Bushman was at one time and in Ithaca, too, under the direction of "Pop" Wharton. Beverly Bayne and Ruth Stonehouse also worked for Wharton. Gertrude McCoy, Sallie Crute and Gladys Hulette were at one time under Wharton's direction, as were also Lenore Ulrich, Billy Quirk, Paul Panzer, Thurlow Bergen, Rose Tapley, Bruce McRae and Ah Ling Foo.

A distinct triumph and one of the most popular and successful feature series of recent years was the "Elaine" series, featuring Pearl White, Arnold Daly and Edwin Arden. In this series also appeared Sheldon Lewis and Creighton Hale. The sensational feature series, "The Mysteries of Myra," the International production now running, is a Wharton production. In this series Howard Estabrook and Jean Sothern are doing some of the finest work of their lives. Allan Murnane, M. W. Rale and Mrs. Leopold Wharton also have important parts.

The Whartons are now at work on a feature entitled "The Black Stork," a picture which is bound to create a sensation. The cast includes Hamilton Revelle, Henry Bergman, Jane Fearnley, Elsie Esmond, Edgar Davenport and Allan Murnane.

WORLD FILM ACTIVITIES.

At the Peerless and Paragon studios, the production headquarters of the World Film Corporation, activities remain at high pressure.

Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell are beginning work under the direction of Robert Thornby, in a visualization of Burton E. Stevenson's book, "Little Comrade," which has been scenarioized by Frances Marion under the direction of William A. Brady.

Harley Knoles begins work shortly on "Her Majesty," which will be Alice Brady's next screen effort, following her return from the moving picture exposition at Chicago. In this picture Miss Brady will be supported by Arthur Ashley, Montagu Love, Irving Cummins, Clara Whipple and Alec B. Francis.

Emile Chautard is concluding work with Robert Warwick, Gail Kane and other well-known World players on "The Heart of a Hero," which is based on Clyde Fitch's stage conception of the historic character's episodic life.

The production required the entire Paragon studio equipment for several days, during which many of the famous big scenes were assembled. Five hundred people alone were used in the hanging scene which closes the picture.

Frank Crane is completing "The World Against Him" and will remain at Saranac Lake until the production is finished, while Maurice Tourneur, director general of Paragon, will begin work next on an elaborate five-act picture and Barry O'Neill, on completing "The Scorching Way," begins work on "The Revolt," in which Gail Kane will star.

Other prominent players, such as Muriel Ostriche, Robert Warwick, Frances Nelson, Gerda Holmes, June Elvidge and Johnny Hines, are all allotted to directors; scenes and casts are being assembled and the entire seven World companies will be busily engaged.

William A. Brady continues to enact supervisorial direction over all scripts, productions and casts.

RIALTO STAFF HAVE BANQUET.

Fifty members of the Rialto family enjoyed a banquet after the performance Sunday night, July 9, tendered by the Rialto orchestra to Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel of "the temple of the motion picture and shrine of music and allied arts." The occasion was Mr. Rothapfel's birthday and the affair was arranged by the musicians through a committee consisting of H. Hand and F. Cork as a surprise. It was held in the promenade at the rear of the orchestra, where a canvas was spread and the banquet table set.

The guests included the executive staff and the technical and mechanical staff. After a period of music and speeches Mr. Rothapfel was presented with a loving cup, the gift of the latter staff, a mahogany phonograph, the gift of Alfred de Manby, and a handsome pipe set, presented by the ushers.

The feature of the evening was the playing for the first time of a march, "Hello Sam," composed by Hermann Hand, the French horn soloist, in Mr. Rothapfel's honor and dedicated to him. The piano score of the march, bound in leather and encased in a mahogany casket, was presented to Mr. Rothapfel with an appropriate address.

JAMES YOUNG TO DIRECT BLANCHE SWEET.

James Young, one of the best known directors in the motion picture industry, has resumed work at the Lasky studios, Hollywood, Cal., and will devote himself exclusively in the future, it is said, on productions for Miss Blanche Sweet. Miss Sweet, early in the spring, appeared under Mr. Young's direction in "The Thousand-Dollar Husband," which is one of the successes of the Paramount Program. Her new picture is entitled "The Unconquered," and the star will be supported by a cast of well-known Lasky players.

IRENE FENWICK METRO STAR.

Irene Fenwick, the star of "The Child of Destiny," a five-part feature production which will be released July 24 on the Metro program, was born in Chicago. She made her professional debut in that city in George Ade's "Peggy from Paris" as a chorus girl. But she only remained in the chorus three weeks. Ambitious and determined to be a star in her own right from the very beginning, she studied the star's part in that production, and was given the role when the star became ill. Miss Fenwick leaped into fame with a single performance, and since then has rapidly come to the front as one of the most charming and gifted young stars in this country.

Miss Fenwick attracted the attention of Charles Frohman, who set his heart on making her a great dramatic star. Under his management she was seen in the stellar role in Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's "The Speckled Band," "The Brass Bottle" and in the revival of "The Importance of Being Earnest." Under Cohan & Harris' management Miss Fenwick was starred with Douglas Fairbanks in "Hawthorne, U. S. A." She was also the star of "The Zebra," with Hamilton Revelle as her leading man.

Scene from "The Child of Destiny" (Metro).

During her Broadway starring engagements a tempting offer to appear in feature motion picture productions was made to Miss Fenwick, and she made her debut in the silent drama under the direction of George Kleine. Among some of the features in which she was starred are "The Green Cloak" and "The Woman Next Door."

German Trade Notes

THE Interior Department's edict of February 25 prohibiting the importation of films and the recent amendment excepting Austrian films from this ruling are followed by the announcement that the Nordische Film Company who were mostly affected through this ruling, taking advantage of the clause by which the Reichskanzler retains the right to make exceptions to the rule, have secured permission to import 2800 kilo of films (approximately 1,700,000 feet), 1800 kilo till July 1st, and 1,000 kilo till September 1st. As the Nordische will probably import mostly negatives from which eight copies are usually printed for the German market, the amount of foreign films which the Danish concern will bring into Germany may be estimated at eight times the amount above quoted.

This new achievement of the Nordische Company is taken as quite a blow to the local industry. Immediately following the Reichskanzler's announcement of February 25, German manufacturers commenced producing with renewed activity, much new capital was invested and a great number of new producing firms were organized to take advantage of the opportunity presented through lack of the formerly strong foreign competition. Renters who estimated that the Nordische would now be unable to fill orders with the same degree of satisfaction made prolonged contracts with producers for increased quantities of film which will now be rather difficult to profitably dispose of with the Nordische in possession of its former strength.

The Nordische, being the only concern which has to date been able to secure permission to import films, will have another great advantage over the local renters as the Scandinavian and American films which the Danish firm imports will permit this concern to deliver a greatly varied program whereas the other firms will be in a position to rent only German and Austrian pictures.

The German firms have placed the matter in the hands of Director Mandl of the Messter Film Company, and Mr. Otto Schmidt, Vitagraph representative, who are now in communication with the Interior Department.

James Kettler has returned from Switzerland, where he was engaged in selling German films for the Swiss market. During his three weeks' trip Mr. Kettler visited Zurich, Basel, Geneva and St. Gaull. Mr. Kettler reports the cinema business as well as practically all industries in that country to be considerably lamed owning to the lack of tourists who formerly contributed so much toward Switzerland's prosperity and the present poor general economic condition of the country. Italian films seem to bear precedence in public esteem, while the German films are naturally most popular in the German part of the republic. Owing to the varied populations the one copy of a film purchased for Switzerland is subjected to a great deal of trimming, as two sets of titles (French and German) are constantly being changed about in the film.

Lieutenant Alexander Count Kolowrat-Krakowsky, Director of the Sascha Film, Vienna, who was sent by the Austrian army at the request of the Turkish War Ministry to Gallipoli during the Dardanelles fighting, had opportunity for the taking of some exceedingly interesting and vivid cinematographic pictures of the retreat of the Allied troops from the peninsula. The pictures which made a very deep impression in Vienna, were recently shown to the Berlin public by the Austrian naval association in the Mozart Saal on Nollendorf Place.

Manager Zeisske, who has been called in for army service, has withdrawn from the management of the Deutsche Bioscop. The well known author, Robert Reinert, who is responsible for a large number of film works, will assume the position formerly occupied by Mr. Zeisske. Activities have been renewed in the Bioscope studio in Neu-Babelsberg. Four regisseurs are occupied with films featuring Maria Carmi and Anna Mueller-Lincke, a Reinert film, "Homunculus," and two three-reel comedies from George Kaiser. "Eva contra Adam" and "Der Freund des Fursten" ("The Duke's Friend"). The author is playing the leading parts in these films, which are being directed by Emil Albes.

Paul Wolfram of the Dresden film renting concern of the same name has secured by purchase the Berlin film house, Engelke & Co. The former owner of the latter firm, Willy Hess, will now devote his time exclusively to film manufacture. Mr. Hess should be able to make a success in his new undertaking owing to the practical knowledge which he has gained through his many years' experience in the film business.

Chr. Muelleneisen, Sr., one of Germany's pioneer film men, has suffered a loss in the death of his twenty-six year old son, Fritz, who recently fell at the front. The bereaved is survived by his parents, Chr. Muelleneisen, Jr., manager of the Luna Film, and a younger brother, Toni, cameraman, at present also at the front. Word has also been received of the death in the field of Willi Hesse, owner of the Olympia theater in Dresden.

Dr. Viktor Mendel, a prominent student of natural science, has been engaged by the National Film Company to produce a series of scientific films including a number of medical studies which upon completion will be used as the basis of several dramas.

In an absorbing Polish-Jewish story, "Nebel und Sonne" ("Clouds and Sun") at the Tauentzien Palast, Joe May as director and Mia May in the main role, once more demonstrated their ability. This film is, in addition to the excellent playing of Mia May and her partner Max Landa, as well as the supporting cast, remarkable for the attention which Mr. May has bestowed even upon the smallest details, unlike most directors who have totally neglected many essential Ghetto points in the last few pictures of this class which have lately been seen.

As a sequel to "Das Tagebuch Collins," which appeared some months ago, the Union theaters are playing Richard Eichberg's "Leben Gegen Leben" ("Life Against Life"). Erich Kaiser-Titz, Louis Neher and Ellen Richter in the leading parts were received with much favor. A number of excellent mountain scenes add to the picture's charm.

A multi-reel farce, "Ein Toller Einfall" ("A Silly Idea") is having a prolonged run at the Kammerlichtspiele. Messrs. Bender, Berisch and Paulig, and the Misses Ellen Richter and Kaete Haack do not permit a let-up in the laughter.

EDISON PICTURE IN MILK CRUSADE.

The state of New York will conduct a crusade against impure milk by the use of motion pictures, and Thomas A. Edison, Inc., is now making a one-reel film entitled "The Trump Card" for the use of the New York State Board of Health in the proposed campaign. While the picture will show the process of pasteurization by which germ life in the lacteal fluid is completely destroyed and any danger of infection eliminated, it will not emphasize the technical process. It is designed to call attention to the danger of unpasteurized milk and to show the method by which milk can be purified, but it does this through the medium of a little human interest story of much intrinsic value. It will educate and entertain at the same time, and the state authorities are confident that this film, and others of a similar nature, can be used very effectively.

The script was written by Alan Crosland, casting director for Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and it was revised by T. Boynton Peck, a Chief of the Division of Exhibits for the State Department of Health. Among the members of the cast are Robert Conness, Adele Pratt, Herbert Prior, Leonie Flugrath, Andy Clark and Charles Sutton.

Observations

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

WITH the arrival of a hot season the departure of thousands of people from the cities and towns for their annual sojourn in the country and at the seaside resorts the motion picture exhibitors have experienced quite a falling off in business. The effect is especially felt by the houses located in districts comprising well-to-do residents, people who are of the 15-20-25 cent class of patrons. Up to about the first of July the exhibitors clung to the hope that the summer would be a cool one, or at least a very late one, but since then the heat has manifested itself to such an extent that the annual falling off in business is to be experienced. But this year the depression is to be more widespread than it has for several years. In addition to the usual causes for it we have the effects of the war movement. While every man who has been called to the Mexican border, or to camps for preparation, may not have been a moving picture fan, and the entire number called to arms (if all were regular attendants) do not form 25 per cent. of the number of daily patrons of the picture houses, still claim is made that the war situation has had a very noticeable effect upon the box office receipts of picture houses in places where those called to arms resided. The main effect is not due to the departure of the enlisted men, but to the contingencies that have arisen through their departure. Many exhibitors say that those left at home, the dependents upon the enlisted men and the people who were the real amusement patrons, find themselves obliged to curtail expenses. In former years the open-air shows have proved a relieving substitute in the summer depression, but many of these places report a falling off in business, which would seem to give some color to the statement that the preparations for war have affected the moving picture business. However, the exhibitors are not discouraged. In many quarters there is a confidence that there will be no war and within a few weeks the situation will settle down to the standard of regular summer seasons. Unfortunately the exhibitors of Greater New York and other parts of the Empire state are not in a position to entertain this hopeful view. The epidemic of infantile paralysis has hit them rather hard. The alarm created by the epidemic in the Greater City has caused the authorities to notify all moving picture houses not to admit children under sixteen years of age during the prevalence of the disease. This regulation applies whether or not the children are accompanied by parents or guardians and will necessarily impair the box office receipts. It is not alone the loss of children patrons that is figured upon, but the loss through adults remaining away on account of not being able to take the children with them.

There are about 850 moving picture theaters in Greater New York and the revenue derived by them each day from the women and children patrons is no small item; nevertheless, when License Commissioner Bell, in co-operation with the Health Department, decided that the picture houses were among the most prominent places of assembly for children and, therefore, among the most likely field for the spread of disease during an epidemic the exhibitors fell into line in utter disregard of a threat accompanying the order that a violation of it would be met with revocation of the exhibitor's license. Some exhibitors, in view of the fact that the disease was apparently prevalent among only children of tender age, endeavored to have the age limit in the order reduced to ten years, but readily acceded to the Health Commissioner's refusal to make the change. More than this the Exhibitors' Association offered to the Health Commissioner a suggestion which he gratefully adopted, in consequence of which the picture houses will flash upon their screens slides furnished by the city urging parents to take no chances if their children show illness, but communicate at once with a doctor, or the Health Department.

Thus we find another exemplification of the good use to which the moving pictures may be put and the willingness of the owners to take advantage of such opportunities. It is the result of a co-operative spirit existing between the exhibitors and the authorities of the city. It is true the exhibitors had no alternative but to comply with the order to not admit the children, but had the city authorities been as aggressive and oppressive as those in many other parts of the country it is quite likely many exhibitors would have been tempted to close their houses until the close of the summer season and the stamping out of the epidemic. The part of the city hit the hardest by the epidemic is Brooklyn and as nearly all the picture houses there are in the residential districts they feel the effects of the Commissioner's order the most. Thus far none of the exhibitors have signified an intention to close. If there should be a movement of that kind it will come principally from the small houses in the poorer quarters where the chief patrons are women and children. One of these managers said: "My business always falls off in the summer because I have no open air privileges and I cannot make my house a real summer one. As a rule I manage to keep abreast with expenses. If I can do that now I shall keep open, but if this epidemic continues to spread and parents are kept away as well as the children by illness in their own homes I naturally will lose too much to justify me in fighting the conditions." One of the large theater managers said: "The Commissioner's order will not interfere with us because our audiences are composed mainly of adults. Unlike the five and ten cent houses we can lose all our child patronage and yet wind up the season on an average summer basis. There is a possibility that some of our business may drop off through the epidemic striking the homes of some of our patrons. There is also a possibility that picture houses of all kinds may lose patronage through the exodus of parents from the city to get their children beyond the zone of the epidemic. The disease struck with such suddenness and severity that parents have become panic stricken. I know of several mothers who left the city with their children today. I think the order of the authorities a good one. It is not, as many suppose, issued to picture theaters alone. It applies to all theaters. Our screen is open to any use the authorities may wish to put it in order to stay and wipe out the epidemic. So long as the authorities are fair with us they can use us for any good purpose."

Talk of protection for scenario writers has been again revived by a proposition to form an organization for copyright purposes. The best protection such an organization can secure will come through co-operation with the amalgamated film industries. The scenario writer is just as much a branch of the motion picture business as the scenario buyer and one deserves as much protection as the other. The scenario writer should also be just as much interested in official censorship matters as the producer who takes the scenario off his hands. Their interests in this respect are identical. The trouble with most writers is that they feel they have a kingdom of their own, that their work is just what everybody wants and if anybody turns it down he is accused of being either an ignoramus or a purloiner. It is true that some writers have been victimized by irresponsible concerns, and it is equally true that many reputable producing concerns have been double-crossed by irresponsible writers. There have been more cases where writers have sold the same scenario to two or more producing companies than there have been of producers adopting ideas from rejected manuscripts. It is also a fact that reputable producing companies have been placed in a false position by writers submitting scenarios based upon ideas gleaned from fellow writers. Operation in unity by all interests in the motion picture sphere will thwart and stamp out all such evils. Should the amalgamated film organization become a reality there is nothing within observation to deter scenario writers in securing a representation in it. With sincere co-operation the evil doers in all branches of the business will eventually be wiped out and the interests of each unit will not only be amply protected, but materially advanced. One thing that will be accomplished is the education of the scenario writer. He may be a writer of exceptional merit and yet not be able to produce a scenario as it should be. The ablest of writers may be given many good points by picture producing companies and directors and thereby in time enhance the value of their work. There is one point many writers will not concede and that is, picture producers, directors and exhibitors are in a better position to judge what moving picture audiences want than authors are. The latter are generally guided by isolated observation while the former get the pulse of the people by experience. It is not infrequent that directors save a supposedly excellent story from failure and it frequently happens that exhibitors do a like service after a film has been placed on exhibition. There is a policy of give and take in the motion picture business that is not understood by most people and it is a policy that calls for intelligent co-operation by all concerned. Some scenario writers have said they are in no way interested in the official censorship question; that it is entirely with the producers and exhibitors; yet these writers will call for the heavens to fall upon the producers after seeing their stories that have passed through the chopping mills of some censor boards. This would seem to make the writers a party to the question. If it is the censors and not the producers that mutilate their stories they should array themselves with those who are opposed to censorship.

Appreciation vs. Criticism.

LATELY several managers of large houses have started to print criticism blanks in their programs, and in the main the custom is a good one. It makes the patron feel that a real interest is taken in his personal likes and dislikes and if he responds to the request for comment, he feels himself to be under a certain obligation to favor that house with his patronage. But since it would seem that the practice is gaining ground, it might be well to speak a word of caution against encouraging the critical habit in the patron. It is better to frame the appeal to encourage their appreciation rather than their criticism, though this does not mean that they should be urged to give decisions that are in violation of their personal opinion. The simplest way to dodge trouble is to ask them to tell what they do like, rather than to mention their dislikes. It brings practically the same results, but it brings it in a way that takes the curse off the scheme.

With Diagrams.

The Strand theater, Erie, Pa., sends in a booklet gotten out for the house. It is a small eight-pager, white paper and a deep blue ink. On the cover is merely the word "Why" with a large question mark below and lines for an address. Inside it deals with the many features of the house for comfort, health and safety. There is no fancy lying, but a straightforward talk about the house, the heating, ventilation, electric wiring, program, music and comforts. It is all plainly and sincerely written and there is something about the typography that matches the style of the writing. The headings are a severe gothic and the body type is set unleaded and in a small face with no attempt at ornamentation beyond a rule bottom line that encloses the page number and a house trade mark cut set into similar rule at the top. If the appearance of the job was planned to match the stuff, the effort has been successful. If it is merely an accident that they go so well together, it is a most fortunate accident. W. J. Haynes points out that the Pennsylvania law does not require the house diagram to the printed and adds that the house is so well provided that they do not fear to do so. The total of exits on the ground floor is nearly the full width of the house, and almost that in the balcony—which is something to brag about, even though we believe there is still a law requiring a certain proportion of exit space to the width. The folder is a good piece of work and should do the house real good. It pays as well to boom your house as your films—sometimes better, since anything done for the house is more lasting in its effect for good.

Too Full.

George W. Bennethum, of the Scenic, York, Pa., sends in a Hennegan program cover built up into a house program. It is almost too full of type. It is to be supposed that some of these programs will come into the hands of persons who are not so intensely interested that they will read every line they see, and these will not be reached by the program that is overloaded. The small type reads well, though a bit flippant at times, but it would pay to let some of this matter out to gain some white space with which to set off the heavy title lines. At present the black lines are almost buried in the masses of black type. The proofreading is not well done. We get "The Busted Honeyman" for Honeymoon, and the names of persons are not set in quotes, though the names of the characters they play may be so set. The printer should be talked to and told that Marian Sais and Ollie Kirkby are real people and not the names of photoplay characters.

Dated Throwaways.

The Star, Reedley, Cal., sends in a "tonight" throwaway and adds day and date, as is always best. It is a simple bill, and for that very reason a good one. We regret that the pink paper prevents reproduction as a model. There is a big "tonight" with day and date following, then "six reels," and in a little smaller type the three features including a local feature found in a news release. Then comes the full list of the reels, a repetition of the "six good reels" and the house name. The whole thing will be read at a glance where more type would prevent the assimilation of any part of the announcement.

Classy.

The Oak Park theater, Oak Park, Ill., gets out a very handsome announcement for Gloria's Romance. The first page is merely a cut of Miss Burke, so well done that you look twice to see whether it is a cut or an actual photograph. As the background is burnished down to a solid black, it makes a striking front. Inside is the announcement, partly set in gothic and partly in script. The gothic looks so much the better that it tells its own story, but gothic in the mass is bad because the letters are all the same height and therefore monotonous. The back page merely carries the trade mark cut. If the type faces had been better chosen, this would rank as an ideal job, but evidently the printer is stocked up with old-fashioned faces.

Took a Car.

To boom the Billie Burke serial Ralph de Bruler, of the Piedmont, Atlanta, Ga., dressed a trolley car and ran it around town. As can be seen, a false work provided space for a lavish announcement as well as room for lithograph work. This car was used to do the advance work and was kept on the street for several days prior to the opening. Details are lacking, but it is to be presumed that there was some noise attractor used inside. Where such a car is used for more than a day, provision should be made for wiring the frame to illuminate the car at night, when both the residential and business sections should be visited.

Wants Some Programs.

The Lyric, St. Genevieve, Mo., is going to have a house program and Manager John Koetting asks that brothers with small four-pagers send him samples. He is thinking of a four or eight-pager, about 4½x6, cream paper and sepia or green ink. He asks for an opinion and layout, though he suggests the layout we like best, with the program on page 3, house talk on 2 and underline or other matter on 4. The layout is good; next best to the South Bethlehem Lehigh Orpheum recently illustrated, or Joe Vion's Crescent program in a later issue. Both of these forms are good and the Vion style permits talk to be run in the margin. As to size, approximately 5x7 is good, but the only thing to do is to look up the paper sizes that can actually be had, figure how they will cut without loss and use that size. Cream laid paper is horribly expensive these days, and we think that a white paper of fair grade would be better, unless the house wants to waste money for the sake of putting up a front. We believe in doing a thing in the best possible manner, but we do not believe in being reckless, and if a program is started with laid tint and continued on cheap news after a few weeks, the effect is retroactive and suggests failure. It is better to start small and gradually grow better.

For color, sepia on cream is excellent; well marked and tasty, IF the printer can handle the brown ink; but green is a little too light, and it would be better to work green on green stock, and blue on blue stock. For white, green does not work well. Brown or blue or a good black would be better. Red is too vivid and pink too pale. Green on blue works well if the right shades are used, but unless well done is very poor. If a fair grade of white paper is used, with good type work and well-written announcement, it will be as good as is needed. Anything more than that is excess, like the gold foil on a cigar. It creates a good impression, but it does not affect the real value of the article. Perhaps a Hennegan colored cover, with space sold to local advertisers to help pay the cost, would work well. It usually does, though our personal preference is for a straight white with the added cost put into an extra four pages that can be made to talk to the patron.

Back in the Fold.

Clyde D. Kluger writes from Altoona, where he is now at the Pastime theater. He says:

> As it has been a few years since I last wrote you in regard to your department, I wish to say that I am still an active reader of the same, and find the World today far above all other trade papers. In the last five years I have missed only one copy and felt lost until the next one came. My last letter to you was written while I was manager of the Palace, Harrisburgh. Thinking that some other exhibitors will be interested, I am sending you a photograph of a splash I used for "The Mysteries of Myra." This was used for the third episode in which the magic mirror is shown. It helped me to turn a poor night into a good one and should be of use to others.

The photograph is self-explanatory. It can be faked with dead globes, with new bulbs, and can be connected up with the light circuit or shown dead. It can be run or merely permitted to stand idle where no motor is handy. It makes a good flash in the lobby and would be most effective if running, as was shown at the International booth in Madison Square Garden. Mr. Kluger has our thanks for the care he took to get the cut copy to us right. It was just the proper sort of glossy print, and came packed so well that there was no crease or scratch. We like copy not matter how it comes, but we do like to get good cuts.

Beating a Herald.

One of the thoughtful things the average publicity manager does is to mess the heralds for which exhibitors pay real money in such a fashion that nothing else may be advertised. Joe Vion had one the other day for a story he was running at the Crescent, and he wanted to add that he also had Chaplin in Police. The herald was all-black background where it was not type, save for a slit in the front page for the house name. Having a printer in his employ, Vion merely printed on the back with size, dusted it with bronze and got a better flash than the plain black on white would have been. Sometimes aluminum will do better than gold, but the principal point is that it is possible to overprint and beat the stingy press man.

Figures.

R. B. Wilby, of the Strand Amusement Company, Montgomery, Ala., usually has something to say when he says anything. His last remarks concern the kiddie matinees and he discusses the action of the recent General Federation of Women's Clubs, already reported. He adds:

> The Plaza theater presented children's programs with fair success last winter, and it will begin their presentation again in the coming fall, but those programs will not be highly successful—and in this case their success means something besides a financial profit for us—unless the mothers of the children for whom they are given actually want them, nor unless sufficient latitude is given in the selection of subjects to permit the exhibition of a program for which the first consideration is to interest.
> In this connection, the fact is worth stating that for three months children made up less than one-half of one per cent. of the Strand's attendance, .46 of one per cent. to be exact.

Just figure that over a moment. With the pictures being censored "for the child," one house reports less than one-half of one per cent. of juvenile patrons. The figures are unusually low, but did you ever figure the percentage of attendants at your house for a reasonably extended period? It works two ways. You can run kiddie matinees to get them back for the special shows, and you can talk back on this censorship bunk.

Opposition.

A western house sends in some of its competitor's advertising. Much of the space is directed at the opposition house. The best line in the advertisement runs:

> The Proof that the Motion Picture Is An Art
> NOBBY PHOTOPLAYS.

Something must be wrong. Fancy James Huneker talking of that "nobby nocturne" of Chopin's or the "nobby" Angelus! That is worse than "movies," and one of the most dastardly blows yet struck. The house sending in the stuff adds that the attacks do not seem to have much effect. This is an error. They do. They make the reader realize that a man who is so badly worried about the other fellow, probably has cause to be. It is the best advertisement that a house can have that the other fellow is worried, for no one worries about ineffective competition.

Wholesale.

L. J. Burkitt of the Lyric, Morrison, Ill., gives a large order when he sends in a pack of advertising stuff for comment, but we like large orders, so there is no kick. There are three kinds of advertising. One is a picture postcard of players in tint with text on the back. One of the cards is printed up with an advertisement of the house; the other for a special picture. Of the two the former is the better, for on the post card the advertisement will last long beyond the day of the attraction, and if it can be made to work continuously, so much the better. Post cards can be used to advantage in advertising the transient attraction, but they are even better when they are made to work for the house alone. But in either case they should not carry much small type. The message must be caught as the card is looked at. It is seldom that it will be read in detail if there is much text. The newspaper advertising does not hold together well. In the advertisement shown here the use of a Paramount frame too small for the space gives the effect of two advertisements. This frame should be used only when the matter can all be laid inside the border. Another advertisement runs two tens. There are virtually two separate advertisements, each with its own heading and set absolutely without regard for the other. It would have been far better had the space been broken across for one heading to cover the two columns. One day is dated immediately below the heading and the other gives lines down with a couple of pieces of cut-off rule between. One carries two black lines and is set mostly solid matter and the other runs a lot of eight point that cannot be read save by study, though there is plenty of chance to set in display. The printer is probably the guilty person and he is a very poor printer indeed. A good printer could do better than that if he was drunk. A third example is a single column down the page. It is not an advertisement at all, but just one darned line after another. The third exhibit is a trio of booklet programs, twelve pages. Sometimes you can tell the program from the trade advertising. Here there is sometimes too much matter for the space in which it is to be set. Possibly it was this that drove the printer to drink. In writing the advertiser must remember that an inch of space cannot be stretched to two inches, and must write only enough for the inch if he wants to get a decent display. The booklet is handy size and good stock, but the arrangement is poor. It would be better to take the two middle pages (seven and eight) and print all of the program there, uniform style and in brief. Then use parts of the other pages for house talk and text stories about (not of) the films announced, with such proportion of the trade advertising as is proper; say not more than half, not counting the middle page. The back page is taken up by a political candidate, where a photoplayer would be better, and the candidate will never be mistaken for a leading man.

Operator and Pressman.

It's been some time since we heard from an operator and press man, but comes now Benjamin Silver, who runs the machine at the Windsor, here in town, and gets out the house program as well. Mr. Silver says he is a bit weak on English as he is foreign born, but he knows good lines when he sees them, and blends them well. The program is about 3x5½, tinted news stock, four pages. The colors of cheap stock are apt to be dull, but he has made a fairly good choice and we imagine that in his location the colored stock will help distribute the matter. He is inclined to use a little too much copy for his space. This is a common fault and he will do well to note how much he writes and then see how much space what he has written takes. In this way he can gradually correct this error. Outside of that he is doing well enough to be content, and he need not bother about his English. It is not the illiterate stuff his plea suggests. He seems to have a sense of advertising values, and with a little practice he can get out of Brother Richardson's jurisdiction entirely, if he wants to.

The Legrand Movie (an awful name for a house) of Wadley, Ga., sends in a program card of good white stock printed in color. On the back is printed:

I'M ON MY BACK;
TURN ME OVER.

Curiosity will lead most persons to comply with the request, so that the program will work best if presented upside down. The card is of small value, however, since it does not list the attractions, but merely gives the show nights (Wednesday and Friday) and announces that they will have "good plays." One line reads: "Always good first-class pictures." There is no conviction in a line like that. Probably the house is not certain of its program in advance, but instead of "Feature Night, Best Picture Plays," it would be better to say:

> Friday is feature night, when the program is selected from the best Broadway attractions.

Even at this it seldom pays to do vague advertising of this sort, and it would be better to wait until the film gets to town and then get out a throwaway.

Small but Hardworking.

The Dreamland, Galena, Ill., gets out a small but very industrious four-page folder, 2x7 inches. The folder opens up to show a two-months' program; merely the titles, dates and stars. The back page carries some simple but strong house talk and on the front is Quality Films for Entertainment.

> As time goes on, the light of understanding gradually breaks forth in the fact that Quality and not quantity is the main factor in productions that have real merit for an evening of pleasure.

There is nothing sensational about a line like that, but it means something. It means more than a lot of large words.

Sure Thing.

Arthur G. Stolte, of the Palace, Vinton, Ia., sends in a throw-away with the remark that we might be interested in what small-town exhibitors are doing to get business. We most certainly are, for the small-town manager is the one who hustles because he has to. As a rule he works harder for a dime than the city man does for his dollar, and three-fourths of the best stuff comes from the small towns. This particular display is a throwaway given out at a local election. It is folded so that all in sight reads:

Have you
School Bond
Proposition?

From there it runs into an advertisement for the Palace; "the theater with the colored lights," which is an unusual house slogan. The stuff is all written by Mr. Stolte and he makes it work. For example, in speaking of the second instalment of "The Girl and the Game" he recalls her stunt in the opening chapter and adds: "Remember your friends were all talking about this picture last Monday. Now see the second chapter today." Then the thrills are listed. The slip is folded and then clipped with a paper clip so that it has the appearance of a bit of election work. For the first chapter of the serial there was a special free matinee for the school children and just that many personal press agents going home after the show. If you can get the kiddies talking, you do not have to worry much about the grown-ups. They can't help hearing.

North Laughs.

Even Tom North, dry as he says he is, had to laugh when a patron of the Seattle V-L-S-E. reported that he could not send back the photographs for a film as he had them on display in a soft drink place which had been raided and was closed up. And of all pictures, it was The White Sister that found itself in such disreputable company.

But the paper hands out a two-edged laugh in its stunt column when it suggests that for Into the Primitive the Exhibitor get some local store to run a fur sale in connection with the showing of the film. It has been a cool summer, but June and July fur sales are a bit out of season, are they not?

For Programs.

Here is a line from the Cameraphone, Pittsburgh, that might be copied into other programs. It reads simply and sincerely and that, after all, is the proper note.

> There is nothing that pleases the management of the Cameraphone theater more than to hear the patron's comments on the picture, orchestra, or the theater as a whole.
> We have, what we believe to be, a cool, clean, comfortable theater, presenting the best photoplays obtainable from the producers, in a live up-to-date manner.
> We will gladly accept your suggestion for the betterment of the theater or any part of the entertainment and test its merits.

Envy Emanuel.

Jay Emanuel, of the Ridge Avenue, Philadelphia, is a person to be envied. In these days of the high cost of paper stock he went and bought a whole carload of stuff from a bankrupt printer. There was pretty much everything in the load from plain news to some of the niftiest colored stock you ever saw and the Ridge patrons must think he is either rich or crazy to use two tone cards for throwaways and they do not know that these are cheaper than manila right at the moment. There is not much of any one kind, but generally enough; but if there is not the printer takes two lots of about the same size and with one change of guide makes the single make-ready suffice.

The Regent, Philadelphia, has been having an anniversary, and to mark the event it repeats the six features that found the greatest favor during the year. This is a capital idea where it can be worked and where it cannot be worked it can at least be announced as the six best.

The Victoria program is rather slovenly at times. It uses three panels and does not care if there are two display and one type or the reverse. A program such as this does not look as well as would one with a more orderly arrangement. Such a little thing as the layout of a piece of paper may attract or repel a patron and the program that is worth printing is worth the trouble of arranging.

Pegging Peg.

F. G. Wells, of the Alamo, Anniston, Ala., sends in a photograph of the street stunt he got up for Peg o' the Ring. He carried a snare and bass drummer, a little girl to represent Peg and a lot of boy clowns. The car covered all the streets passable by an auto and drew a big crowd to the house. After the performance the little girl, who represented Peg, gave out souvenirs. In a photograph the colors of the paper do not come out very clearly, but the effect is suggested. Evidently the wheel discs were home-made. It would pay, if the car is regularly used, to get a set that can easily be attached and detached, painting them over as occasion requires. Details have been given in this department and Popular Mechanics, some time ago, had a design for a false wheel that would remain upright, overcoming the drawback that a revolving sign cannot easily be read. Any device could probably be rigged up that would slip over the hub of the wheel with the greater weight at the bottom.

Charles H. Barron, of the Majestic, Ponca City, Okla., also went in heavily for display. He writes:

> I am sending you, under separate cover, a photo I had taken on last Saturday, the day I opened the Universal serial, "Peg O' the Ring." I had a circus parade. In the first place, I offered three prizes to the three boys who had the best turnout to represent a circus wagon. I had these in the parade. The parade was headed by a young lady to represent Grace Cunard as "Peg." The girl I chose had curly hair and she wore it dressed as Grace Cunard wears hers in this serial. She wore a black mask across her eyes, so she would not be easily recognized. I also hired a clown from the 101 Ranch who brought in two trick donkeys, whatever children in town who wanted to go in the parade, wore Indian costumes, etc. I used my Unaphone as a calliope, put it in my car, which was covered with banners. This display sure stacked them in. We paraded the main business blocks.

The photograph Mr. Barron speaks of does not seem to have arrived at the office. The idea of letting the kiddies in on the parade was distinctly good. They love to see parades, but they love better to be of them. A series of small prizes for costumes would have helped some and not have added greatly to the cost. A lot depends upon getting a serial started properly, and something must be done to get them to the first instalment.

As a Favor.

Exhibitors generally have been kind enough to recommend our Technique of the Photoplay to their patrons who ask about a book on play writing. Will they please note that a new edition is now out, replacing the second edition. This is a larger, better, and, we believe, a far more helpful book. Being more than double the size of the old, the price has been raised to three dollars. Please remember that the two dollar book is out of print. We do not recommend that exhibitors seek to interest their patrons in photoplay writing since failure is apt to react against the house, but where the aspirant is determined, we will appreciate a mention of the new work.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising to Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

A Ritual of Form.

PROFESSOR Robert Wilson Neal, in a recent interview, is quoted as saying in part:

> The mere preparation of the script is easy, though you would not think so from the number of books that have been written about it. Of the lot, only two or three are worth having and but one of these puts the matter in a nutshell—E. W. Sargent's Technique of the Photoplay. For the motion picture student it is what the copy of the ritual is to the master of the lodge.

Nothing could more aptly express the relation of form and idea that this last sentence. It is to the student what the ritual is to the master of the lodge. But there are many masters of lodges who are nothing but ritual, just as there are many photoplay students who are nothing but writers of form. The real master of a lodge is not a slave to ritual. He is, or should be, a master of the ritualistic form, but this is only the mechanical side of his work. His real success—or failure— is determined not by his proficiency in ritual but by his executive and administrative ability. He must be perfect in his ritual if slovenly work is not to disgust the lodge, but perfect floor work alone will not make a lodge prosperous. There must be guidance, as well. Until authors are made to realize that both form and idea MUST be mastered, we shall have from them form only, and form commands no great admiration unless backed by brains.

Unconscious Plagiarism.

Every little while some correspondent asks a question that differs from the usual "how many scenes make a reel?" and "what is the average price of a play?" One nice little problem is presented in a recent inquiry. The author has written a story based upon an almost forgotten murder mystery. Since the completion of the script the mystery has been solved. The solution is unlike that of his story and unlike the attempted solutions of some years ago. Somehow the author is led to fear that perhaps his story is an unconscious plagiarism. It sounds too familiar and reminiscent to be original, he thinks. He asks advice.

It is difficult in the extreme to advise. It may be that the work on the story has made it seem as though it harked back of the inspiration. On the other hand it may be that he has remembered a story without recalling the original source. He does not like to throw the script away and is in doubt as to the propriety of trying to sell it.

Personally we should regard with suspicion an idea that seemed reminiscent whether the source was remembered or not. On the other hand it might hurt the reputation of the writer to send it out and sell only to have the original source uncovered. It is a nice problem, but it would be safer to retire the idea.

That Synopsis Only.

John William Kellette, continuing his observations on the story the synopsis of which has already been printed, contributes another phase of action as it was in the original and as it was reconstructed by John Adolfi and himself. He says:

Sending two constructions to you of the same situation. The reason for the change, most of all, was because most of our work is done from 9 (and in many cases 7) feet to 12 feet from the camera. To stage scene 82 as originally written would compel us to go back more than 20 feet. Figures would be rather small at that distance and much of the business would be lost. Another change was on account of building in the logical means for having Deane with something in his possession whereby he could write or print the word "where" so that the little fellow up in the gallery could see it written. As the "road to nowhere" plays an important part in the scenes that follow, it was necessary to bring this out plainly, hence the dead fire, the charcoal, closeup of hand picking it up, the closeup of Deane writing it, etc., and to advance the love theme, it was necessary to bring Jack and Caprice together alone. This is accomplished by a query with the bundle in evidence, a flash of the shack, both making an exit to the shack, and then leaving her on the scene to watch the auto go away—the sigh; "ain't he grand," and then letting her sit alone with her thoughts.

Writers are too prone to accept the first thing at hand to get over a bit of business. This point is brought out in No. 82—"Deane grabs chalk or pencil near at hand"—How on earth could Deane have chalk near at hand unless expressly for the purpose of writing that sign? Those looking for flaws in pictures would instantly say: "Why was the chalk there?" A pencil would not make a mark black enough to be read by anybody, and the camera at 20 feet could not catch the lines. Hence the closeup of Deane writing "where" on the board. It took a little thought to get that dead fire under that signboard, but it was perfectly logical. Roadbuilders might have built the fire to warm the pot of coffee. A tramp might have built it to roast an ear of corn. It was perfectly logical, and, the strongest of all, entirely convincing.

This, from me, is not new. I have read it many times in your excellent department and have profited by it. But the error is being made every day, and I hope to see it driven in—Never write a thing in the script unless it is perfectly logical and because it belongs there. Don't be forever in the reach of the "long arm of coincidence."

I think if you take both constructions and run them on the "deadly parallel," the novice could get a better grasp on technique as employed by a writer and a producer.

I endeavored, in writing the synopsis and the scene continuity in my former letter to you, to show the reader that the synopsis did not carry that portion of the business, and had the synopsis carried the incident of the dog stealing the "drumstick," it would have given which ever director who read it, a chance to put in practically the same business we did, and it would have made more interesting reading. Don't be afraid to write all the good points the script contains. Give the scenario editor a generous sample, and if he wants to buy your synopsis send along a complete script, so that he may profit by your ideas, because there never was a construction so bad but what some good was gleaned from it. I'd advise the novice to study technique because it means that he will be able to get more from his idea than if he wrote only the synopsis, and it might lead him into paths that will develop a stronger story.

The scenario writer wrote his action this way:

Road to No...

Balance of board broken off. Automobile party drives in—puzzled. Boys get out. Study the signboard.

77—Road, forsaken—Caprice walking along. Worried. Stops, turns back, face betrays purpose (looks at doll) alright—exits.

78—Back to party—All curious—Caprice walks up—Startled, nervous.

79—Closeup of Caprice, startled and pained. Face showing beauty.

80—Closeup of Jack looking intently.

81—Group of automobile party, showing girls with Deane looking with curious intent (note that boys get out of auto in 76).

82—Scene including the crowd, close as possible, with signpost one side. Jack speaks, pointing to sign post—Asks girl where road leads to—Slowly she speaks.

SUBTITLE—"It don't go nowheres, it's been throw'd up for years. It's a road to nowhere."

(Back to scene) Party amused, all laugh and jolly each other and Deane laughs to the girl. She embarrassed. Deane grabs chalk or piece of pencil, at hand (note this), climbs up and writes on the board, finishing out words, making it read "Road to Nowhere." All laugh, as Jack looks seriously to the girl. Jack steps to her politely, lifts head, inquires (Evidently for his grandfather).

83—Closeup of Caprice and Jack. She looks at him with admiration—he admires her. He looks at the doll, notices it for first time. She embarrassed, hides doll under arm—He speaks (as if asking her to take something to grandfather) Jack turns away hurriedly, as Deane steps up to her, she nervous—Deane sensuous.

84—View of automobile—Jack steps to automobile, gets a bundle, turns back, angered.

Inside Writing.

Free lances who are sufficiently well established with certain studios are now working a synopsis only scheme that makes for better scripts. The synopsis is sent with the request for suggestions before the continuity is made. The editor indicates desired changes and suggests improvement and the action is then written in full and sent in.

This is a scheme that is not practical yet, save for those who sell much to certain studios, but it will probably be found to be the real solution of the problem of writing to please the director and preventing him from making needless changes. If we are not mistaken Marc Edmund Jones was the first to try this scheme. Now several are doing it, including A. E. Blackman and this writer. It is recommended to all editors who have not yet tried it and we hope, in time, to see the scheme come into practically universal use.

The THIRD Edition of

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies, by mail, on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 147.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear on the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What do you understand by emergency lights? Where should their switches and fuses be placed, and at what point should the emergency light circuits be attached to the supply? What, in your opinion, should be the limit of size in picture and why.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 140.

Those entitled to the Roll of Honor on Question 140 are: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; J. L. Arnold, Bellingham, Wash.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; L. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; Thomas J. Maloney, New Bedford, Mass.; Charles A. Stuckey, Niagara Falls, Canada; W. E. Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; O. J. Bean, New Bedford, Mass.; G. A. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.; Merle Hoover, Franklin, Ind., and M. Capohianco, Roseto, Pa.

None of the Roll of Honor answers, however, were entirely complete, therefore I have concluded to answer Question 140 myself, the answer being really a conglomeration of points contained in the various Roll of Honor answers.

Reply to Question No. 140.

By F. H. Richardson, New York City.

The Question:

Tell how you think films ought to be cared for in the operating room. Tell us what tools you think an operator should own, and what the management ought to supply.

The Answer:

The film placed in the hands of the operator each day is worth from $500 to $1,000, or, in some cases, even more. Its comparative condition on leaving his hands will depend upon the intelligent care it has been given while in his possession, therefore, the care the film receives in the operating room is of very great importance. Upon unpacking the films the bands should not be thrown down any old place, but be placed either in the cans, or carefully hung up where they will receive no damage. While it should not be, and is not a part of the duty of the operator to examine films, which are presumed to reach him in mechanically perfect condition, still, in practice, particularly where films are on circuit, it really is essential that he make at least a reasonably careful examination as to the condition of the films before attempting to project them. If this is neglected there will be a decided chance that the show will be stopped, or the result upon the screen seriously injured by mechanical defects in the films. This work should, however, as a matter of justice and right, be paid for extra, as it most emphatically is not a legitimate part of the operator's duty.

After unpacking and inspection the films should be immediately placed in a fireproof container, in which each reel is separated from its neighbor by fireproof partitions, and under the whole should be a moisture tray containing sponges or absorbent felt, the sponges or felt to be kept continuously moist in order to prevent the films from being unduly dried out by the hot air of the operating room. Right here, however, there is room for considerable judgment on the part of the operator, because in a naturally moist climate it is quite possible that no artificial moisture will be either necessary or desirable, particularly in what is known as the "wet season" in a naturally moist climate. In a dry climate, however, such as, for instance, Arizona and Colorado, the presence of moisture is absolutely essential to the preservation of the film in good condition.

Rewinding should be done slowly, preferably by motor, with plenty of tension on the reel that is being rewound from, so that the film will be rewound snugly, with no necessity for "pulling down."

Every care should be exercised to avoid getting oil on the film, since it is highly injurious from any and every point of view, and this involves the careful oiling of the projector, using one, or at most, two drops of oil for each bearing. Right care of the film also involves careful adjustment of the tension of the projector, and of the take-up of the projector; moreover, it involves the renewal of the intermittent sprocket the moment there is any sign of undercut. It also involves the use of some sort of lubricant on the tension shoes when running first run, upon which the emulsion is still soft, and the maintenance of the fire valves of the magazines in good condition and free from deposit of emulsion or dust which may scratch the film. The film should never be wiped with a dirty cloth, particularly one upon which there is carbon dust. It should never be washed with alcohol, gasoline or benzine, since, while these liquids remove the oil, they tend to render the film hard and brittle by removing the natural oil from the emulsion. Operators should see to it that, aside from natural and unavoidable wear, the films leave his hands in as good condition as they reach him.

With regard to tools, a number of the Roll of Honor answerers say that the list on page 238, third edition of the Handbook, cannot be much improved upon, though it has been suggested that a test lamp and pair of opera glasses should be added. The list is as follows: One pair "button" pliers, 8 or 10 inch; one pair 8 or 10 inch lineman's side cutting pliers (I leave the matter of size open, as some prefer one and some the other); one pair 8 or 10 inch gas pliers; one large and one medium screw-driver; one screw-driver with good length of carefully tempered blade for small machine screws, to be heavily magnetized so as to hold small screws; one pair of pliers for notching film, see Fig. 76; one small riveting hammer; one claw hammer; one small cold chisel; one medium-sized punch; one very small punch for star and cam pins; one small pair tinner's snips; pair blunt-nose film shears (such as clerks use); one small gasoline torch for soldering wire joints; one hack-saw. With this kit you will be able to do almost any ordinary job, but you will have use for them all. In addition to the above the house manager should furnish such files as are necessary, say one 8 and one 10 inch flat file, one 5/8 round file, one 8 inch "rat tail" file, a small bench vise and anvil and some soldering flux and solder wire. In this list there is nothing which will not be found of use, and many operators will desire and acquire a much more elaborate kit.

Speeding the Film.

This is a subject which has already received much attention in this department, but it constitutes an evil so great that I feel it should receive continued attention until such time as managers have been brought to a realization of the manifold evils of their course in this particular.

Of late there has sprung into existence among a certain type of manager an idea that a certain amount of added speed above normal gives "pep" to the show. Surely this type of manager ought to receive a medal for his nerve. Stripped of all superfluous verbiage his "pep" idea simply amounts to this: I, a theater manager, know more about how the scenes ought to be acted than did the director, or the actor or actress, and am capable and competent to improve upon their work. I would suggest—most humbly suggest to theater managers that the director and the artists may be presumed to know how the various scenes ought to be enacted quite as well as the theater manager can possibly know, and that it borders closely upon presumption—to use no harsher term—for a theater manager to try to improve upon the work of those who have spent months and very often many years in learning the mastery of their art. The actors and actresses and directors will attend to that little matter of "pep," Mr. Manager, and the "pep" you try to put in usually results in working very real injury to the play.

Imagine, if you can, a theater manager trying to improve upon the work of Mary Pickford and Anita Stewart. Why this type of manager would not hesitate to put a little "pep" into the work of Geraldine Farrar, Southern, or even the immortal Bernhardt.

Passing by this phase of the matter, however, let us consider the more serious evil of over-speeding, meaning the running through of a film at 70, 80, or even 90 feet per minute. It is a well known fact that the pressure upon the edges of the sprocket holes of the film is sufficient to cause the delicate edge of the celluloid to cut away steel sprocket teeth which are as hard as glass. This action takes place even at normal speed, and takes place with a tolerable degree of rapidity too, let me tell you, which proves that, even at normal speed, the edge of the sprocket hole is performing some very real and very hard work, considering the fact that it is of celluloid and only 5½ thousandths of an inch in thickness. Now when we speed up it means two things; first that with the tension at the gate set for normal speed there would still be excessive strain on the sprocket holes, due to the increased inertia of the film, but as a matter of fact excessive speed absolutely compels the use of excessive tension at the aperture, and this very, very greatly increases the strain on the sprocket holes of the film, and may even, and actually does cause cracks to appear at the edge of the sprocket holes. In any event, however, while it may not actually cause rupture, it does strain the sprocket holes, and unduly wears their edges, thus gradually setting up unsteadiness of the picture on the screen.

The manager who compels or allows the speeding of the film above that which makes for naturalness of action is not only guilty of greatly impairing, or even utterly ruining the performance of a photoplay which has perhaps cost thousands of dollars, but he is also rendering absurd and ridiculous the work of the artists, who themselves have a reputation which is worth real money to them to sustain, but he is also straining the projection machine, and thus doing an injury to the projection machine manufacturer whose reputation depends upon the performance of the mechanism.

The really absurd part of this is, however, that many of these over-speeding managers will actually criticise the work of the actors, and comment on its mediocrity, when that mediocrity is due wholly and entirely to the ridiculous speed at which they are made to move by the over-speeding of his own projector. Nor is this all, for the manager who thus over-strains the projector is the very first one to raise a howl of protest when it will no longer deliver good results.

Over-speeding of the film is, as I before said, an outrage on the moving picture industry in all its branches, and, more than that, it comes pretty close to being downright dishonesty with the audience. The audience does not pay to see a jumping-jack performance; it pays to see a photoplay projected in the best possible manner. ARE YOU, MR. MANAGER, DEALING HONESTLY WITH YOUR PATRONS WHEN YOU OVER-SPEED THE FILM IN ORDER TO RUSH THE SHOW THROUGH, GET THE AUDIENCE OUT, AND GET ANOTHER ONE IN? ARE YOU DEALING HONESTLY WITH THE PRODUCERS, THE PERFORMANCE OF WHOSE PRODUCTIONS YOU ARE RUINING? ARE YOU DEALING HONESTLY WITH THE EXCHANGE WHOSE PROPERTY YOU ARE WANTONLY DAMAGING? ARE YOU DEALING HONESTLY WITH THE PROJECTION MACHINE MANUFACTURER, OR WITH THE OPERATOR WHO ALSO HAS A REPUTATION TO SUSTAIN? Think it over, Mr. Manager, and think it over very carefully. The "added speed for pep" manager is simply absurd; the other is something very much worse, and the fact that you may over-speed in order to crowd too many reels into a given space of time is just as bad and just as dishonest as rushing them through in order to shorten the show and get the audience out.

Punch Marks.

S. E. Barnes Wichita, Kan., sends in some clippings of films and says:

> Here are some pieces of film for your inspection. The two longer pieces were taken from a Vitagraph, V-L-S-E feature, and, as you see, some operator (??) wanted to mark the end of the reel, which he certainly did. I have seen some punched film in my time, but this is the worst. The small pieces are from "World" pictures, and are a good sample of the way the exchanges themselves mutilate their films. They punch the marks three and four times in each reel, which makes a very pretty (??) effect on the screen when they appear, usually at the very most dramatic part of the picture. I promptly amputate every one of them, but it just don't seem to do any good, for they keep coming. We get all our film from the Kansas City offices. I see by the department that you intend to take a trip out this way next fall. If so, I hope you will arrange to stop in Wichita. We have a new local here which was chartered in January of this year. We have about fifteen members, and I feel sure the boys would be glad to meet you. I have a copy of the new Handbook. It certainly is great. I have the first and second editions also, but there is no comparison between them and your last work.

The two V-L-S-E samples spoken of are 31 pictures long—that is to say, both of them together are that long, and in these 31 pictures are 36 large punch marks. Outrageous is no name for it. The Mutual Film Corporation has written the department as follows:

> We have noted with interest your favor of the 4th inst., regarding punch marks in film. This evil to which you call attention is getting to be a very serious matter, and we are looking for a practical method of eliminating same. In your second paragraph you suggest that the only way to check it is to incorporate some change-over sign. We have not been able so far to devise a practical change-over sign. If you can suggest something which will answer this purpose it would be greatly appreciated. The matter of manufacturers' punches, to which you refer, can be very readily regulated, as the perforations in question are made by the exchange. We expect to take up with our exchanges very shortly the matter of both classes of punches, and at the same time would like to incorporate some intelligent suggestions or instructions as to a substitute change-over sign; therefore, if you can give us a workable suggestion out of your valuable experience, it will be appreciated.
> To this communication the following reply has been sent:
> "Mutual Film Corporation, New York City. Gentlemen: With reference to yours of May 9th, answer to which has been delayed, partly in an endeavor to get ideas from different ones with regard to a practical change-over sign, and partly through my absence from the city, I would suggest tentatively some such scheme as the following: Instruct your directors to so arrange that the end of each reel will be a sub-title, if necessary, putting in some short sub-title, and let this sub-title be of some particular or peculiar form. For instance: Have the change-over sub-title for each frame surrounded by a row of stars, or a tolerably large star in each corner, or make it of some peculiar or particular form. Now half of this subtitle must be on the end of the first reel and half on the beginning of the second reel, or half on the end of the second and half on the beginning of the third, and so on. This sub-title of peculiar form would soon come to be recognized by the operator as meaning the end of the reel, and he would therefore have no reason to punch holes in the film. It seems to me the worst thing that could be said for this scheme is that it might compel the insertion of unnecessary sub-titles, but that would be far preferable, I think, to the present unsightly punch marks. There is no reason why all manufacturers should not adopt this or some other practical idea, and standardize the thing by making the change-over sub-title with an arrow in each corner, or, for that matter, in one corner. The arrow is only a suggestion. It could be any other plain, distinct mark, but I think the arrow would be a thing more likely to be universally accepted. Another, and perhaps even more readily workable plan, would be to insert into the printing machine a mask of peculiar form, or some sort of indicator during the printing of the last fifty feet of each multiple reel release. If these suggestions meet with your approval I should be glad to hear from you, whereupon I will take the matter up with other producers, and see if some such arrangement cannot be adopted.

I am very glad to hear the Mutual Film Corporation say that the punch marks put in by exchanges can be regulated. The matter certainly needs regulation. As Brother Barnes says, it is not a pleasant experience to have that thing flashed in one's eyes in the middle of the most dramatic part of the film; also, it does no good to put them in, because operators who are real operators will promptly proceed to cut them out again, and that unnecessarily injures the film. In fact, I have myself advised operators to eliminate these marks, and I will continue to so advise.

The Answers.

George P. Hartzes, Duluth, Minn., says:

> Received the question booklets and would like to get the answers at any cost.

Can't be did, Brother Hartzes. The only way you can secure them is to get the back copies of the Moving Picture World since the questions started. They are answered one each week in the projection department. Whether the questions and answers will finally be published in book form or not remains yet to be decided, but if it is done it will be some considerable time in the future.

High School Operating Room.

C. H. Carson, Pasadena, Cal., says:

> Enclosed find photograph which may be of interest. It shows one end of our high school motion picture operating room, immediately outside of which is located a G. E. motor generator set. The machines are supplied with Kino lenses, projecting a 17-foot picture at a distance of 108 feet. The auditorium seats 1,800. We have hopes that the operating room may be enlarged this summer, in order that it may accommodate a dissolver and spot light. We had only one machine when the room was constructed, and while it was pretty roomy then it is full enough now. You may be interested to note that we follow the system of port fire shutters suspended from a string in which is placed a piece of film held over the aperture plate as advocated in the Handbook. Immediately across the hall we have a room seating 200, where there is one Simplex machine. During the coming year we will probably have one or two portable projectors. There are about half a dozen stereopticons in the school, so that you see the 2,000 students in this Temple of Learning of the "wild and woolly west" handle quite some visual educational work.

Quite so, Friend Carson, quite so. And I think that will be the condition in practically all schools in the near future. I see you have swung one machine around sideways in order to show the other; at least that seems to be the case. I would suggest, Brother Carson, that merely as a matter of health, you ought to attach the pipes at the top of the lamphouses to a flue running to the open air. That is why they were placed there. Not only would this carry away a great amount of the heat of the arc, which now goes directly into the operating room, but it would carry away the gas which is formed by the volatilization of the carbons, and which is, I think, decidedly unhealthy.

Your 17-foot picture is, I believe, somewhat larger than is necessary. The 15-foot 4-inch picture I saw in Madison Square Garden during the Exposition has made me a tolerably ardent exponent of the smaller picture. That picture showed up well in Madison Square Garden, and a picture that will do that is sufficiently large for any ordinary auditorium. By reducing your picture even to 16 feet you would gain a considerable added screen brilliancy with the same amount of light, and would very considerably reduce eye strain from the front seats of the auditorium—those nearest the screen. The fuse-link is good.

Very Good.

The Paramount Washington Exchange has been sending out with its film shipments the following placard, designed to be placed in the operating room, or wherever it will do the most good.

BE CAREFUL with this film.

REMEMBER the house running it after you.

Keep your machine CLEAN; use wax where the film touches the machine.

OIL damages film. A charge will be made if film is returned with oil on it.

PUNCH HOLES will not be permitted. A charge for ten feet of film will be made if punched.

A DAMAGE charge for ten feet of film will be made if BAD PATCHES are put in film.

MOST IMPORTANT: See that your IDLERS are set properly so that the film will not be CREASED on the side through the sprocket holes.

CREASING means permanent injury and will be charged for.

REWINDING: Be careful; do not hold the film and turn the rewinder handle.

IN CLEANING FILM be careful no carbon or dust is on the cloth. It will scratch film.

HELP US to give you film in good condition.

SHIPPING: Place bands on the proper reels and ship according to instructions immediately after use.

The placard is all right as far as it goes. I was, however, somewhat amused at the comment on the danger of scratching the film by means of a cloth containing carbon dust and the very brief mention of the enormous amount of damage done by improper rewinding of the film in the process of which carbon and other dust not only scratches the film, but makes scratches large enough to cause rain marks. The instructions to use wax where the film touches the machine will bring a smile to the face of many operators. We can imagine an operator trying a stunt of that kind and placing wax on the upper gait idlers. What the promulgator of this particular piece of wisdom probably meant was: Place wax on the tension shoes when using first run film. There would be no earthly sense in using wax with anything else, and the film touches the machine at quite some several points where the placing of wax would be absurd. The charge for film damaged by oil is good, and the comment that punch holes will not be permitted should also be made to apply to the punch holes put in by the exchange, which are just as unnecessary and pernicious in their effect as those put in by the operator. When found in film I most emphatically advise operators to cut them out. A damage charge for ten feet of film for bad patches is excellent. Possibly if enforced it may induce theater managers to place the splicing of film in the hands of competent operators instead of ushers, and give them time to make a proper splice instead of expecting it to be done with one hand while the operator cranks the machine with the other. For the benefit of the Paramount Washington Exchange, I would say that it by no means follows that the creasing of film is due to improperly set idlers, though it certainly does mean permanent injury.

State Board of Health.

Warren H. Booker, chief of the Bureau of Engineering and Education of the North Carolina State Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C., writes:

> This board is working on a project of carrying out an educational motion picture health campaign in this state by means of equipping a motor delivery truck with a light engine generator set, a portable projection machine, such as the Edison Exhibition Model, which we have at present, or, preferably, a Powers road equipment, which we are arranging to secure in the very near future, together with a selection of health films, the latter to be supplemented with comic and dramatic subjects by means of which we hope to be able to give moving picture health lectures and entertainments in small communities not already provided with moving picture theaters or electric lighting plants.
> We are very anxious to get the most out of our outfit, and would like therefore to ask if you can refer us to any publication or small handbook which would be of assistance to our lecturer and aid him to secure better results with the projection machine and outfit. Thus far we have been using a plain muslin sheet for a screen. This is very satisfactory for small pictures, but we contemplate the securing of a better projection surface and would be glad to have your advice with regard to this matter. At present we have a 10-foot screen and a 16-foot one, using whichever one is best suited to the conditions we meet.

This, it seems to me, is a very sensible thing for a State Board of Health to do, nor do I see any reason why the lecture plan could not be carried out in the larger cities by making a proper arrangement with some theaters therein for a series of health lectures and films in conjunction with their regular program. The underlying idea is good. I think there can be no question about that. I would suggest, however, that the Powers road equipment would be decidedly superior to the Exhibition Model. The latter is a very old type of equipment, having a comparatively inefficient shutter, and an inefficient, by comparison with modern models, lamp and lamphouse. Please understand clearly that I am not, in this, referring to any type of Edison machine except the old Exhibition Model.

I would suggest to Mr. Booker that he correspond with the Wallace Golden Rule Road Shows at Red Oak, Iowa, as they have, so far as my knowledge goes, the most complete road show equipment in this country, producing their light by means of a plant installed in a motor-driven truck. As I remember the matter, they use the motor of the truck to run the generator. I would also suggest that others who have knowledge of equipment of this kind communicate with Mr. Booker, chief of the Bureau of Engineering and Education, North Carolina State Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C., giving him such information as they may be in possession of. I would further suggest to Mr. Booker that a metallic surface screen will be of distinct value for work of this kind, where the amperage is necessarily somewhat limited, and would further suggest that a type of screen having a pretty heavy supporting material be selected.

Where Lies the Trouble.

J. O. Sneva, Underwood, Minn., orders a Handbook, and says:

> What causes my carbons to burn in such a peculiar way? I use 5/8 cored plano positive and 1/2 inch cored negative. After burning for awhile a deep crater forms on the positive carbon and a long tit on the negative. When this long point extends into the crater of the positive the light becomes very poor; also it forms again a short time after I break it off. I use 25 to 40 amperes, 100 volt D. C. through a grid type rheostat. The illumination is good, but it is hard to keep the screen free from red edges, or a dark, bluish patch in the center. It is only when the arc is at its best that the screen is evenly illuminated all over. I have also tried a solid negative, but the result was the same. The wires from the main to the operating room are No. 10 rubber covered. Are they large enough?

Most decidedly no. Yank those No. 10 wires out and put at least No. 6 in their place. I would, however, advise the installation of No. 5, since the voltage drop will be less, hence there will be less loss. The deep crater you speak of may be due to carbon fault, but the tit is the direct result of carrying your arc too short. I suppose the reason which compels you to do this is that the resistance of these No. 10 wires is so great that you have to burn a very short arc, thus reducing its resistance to the least possible value in order to get the amperage you want, and this in turn prevents the arc from getting the amount of air necessary to volatilize the carbon. Under this condition graphite forms on the lower carbon tip, and, inasmuch as graphite has very high resistance, and will withstand tremendous temperatures for a long time, it of course sets up precisely the trouble you describe.

The first thing to do is to increase the size of those wires; put in No. 6 or No. 5 leads, and be sure that your asbestos cable is No. 6. Directions for measuring your asbestos cable will be found on pages 313 and 314 of the third edition of the Handbook. I would also direct your attention to the subject matter on pages 50, 233 and 271, as well as "Voltage Drop," page 45.

I would also recommend that you use a solid carbon below. The cored lower carbon supplies you much gas. It makes the arc easier to handle, but forms a curtain of gas in front of the creater, which, in addition to absorbing a portion of the light, also very greatly injures the tone of that which does pass.

To sum up: Get bigger wires; carry a longer arc, and use a solid carbon below.

Brother Hayes Criticised.

Elizabeth, N. J., (I omit the name of the writer so that no ill feeling will be stirred up) says:

> As an exhibir of this city, I was interested in the Manager's letter of appreciation of your May 6 Hoboken lecture because, as is proven by the attached printed program of his theater for the dates June 7, and 8, he is advertising sixteen reels as his program. Now this is contrary to your ideas, as expressed over and over again in the projection department. And this without a doubt one of the things which operate to injure our business, not only in this, but adjoining cities. As a matter of fact, this man's excessive program is doing much damage in surrounding towns, as is proven by occasional visitors, who cannot understand why if the "Garden" in Elizabeth can show sixteen reels, their local theaters cannot do likewise.

Yes, Elizabeth, I thoroughly agree with you, and am really surprised that friend manager would commit such an error in judgment as this, for he may take it from me it is an error in judgment, and a very great one, too. Sixteen reels of pictures is, laying all other considerations aside, an ill-advised endeavor to secure patronage which reacts directly upon your theater, and all other Elizabeth theaters, as well, by reason of the fact that it surfeits the patron with motion pictures. It gives him what we might call an over-dose of that particular form of amusement. Sixteen reels properly projected would require almost three hours for the program, and when one has witnessed a three-hour motion picture performance, unless it be something of absolutely extraordinary worth, one does not want any more pictures for at least that week. I would suggest that if instead of the sixteen-reel-method of securing added patronage, he concentrate upon high class presentation of the picture and high class projection. It will get him more patronage in the long run—a great deal more; also it will be better for the motion picture industry of Elizabeth.

Fine Work.

Recently by invitation of Francis A. Mangan, manager Cumberland Theater, Cumberland and Green avenues, Brooklyn, I visited that theater with deep laid intent to examine into its chronometer balance and cylinder escapement, and, as usual, praise tbat which appeared to be good and gently rap that which seemed to be bad, the rap being tempered by the nature of the sin committed.

The Cumberland has a beautiful auditorium, and an imposing "front." It seats 600, all on one floor, there being no balcony, though the installation of one is being considered. The auditorium is well lighted, and tbe lighting is well handled. Those responsible for the music and orchestra of seven pieces are deserving of distinct credit, because during my visit there seemed to be absolutely nothing to criticise in the matter of music. It was, I believe, as well, or better handled than any I have, up to date, heard in a theater of similar class.

The owner is Mr. Joseph Quinn, and, as I have said, tbe manager, Francis A, Mangan; both courteous and affable gentlemen, quite willing to listen to criticism as well as to praise. Arthur Bausch and James Howard are in charge of projection and, let me tell you, it's some projection, too. The screen is of plaster, coated with some sort of preparation, and in all my experience I don't think I have seen a picture projected with better, purer light tone. The whites were remarkably pure and the picture stood out clear cut and sharp. The screen was surrounded with a border of black which, at a guess, is five or six feet wide at top, bottom, and both sides. The operating room is, wonderful to relate, fairly well located. The lens is somewhat above the center of the screen, but not sufficiently so to produce noticeable distortion. The room was ample in size when it was built, but, as I have pointed out, increase in length of modern projection machines has made necessary an increased depth of two feet front and back. Two Baird machines are certainly delivering high class results on the screen, but there is barely room for the operator to pass between the lamp control handles and the rear wall of the room; also the observation ports, while ample in width (about 12 inches), are located too high, which acts as a severe handicap in the producing of perfect results on the screen. I advised Neighbors Quinn and Mangan to lower those ports at least 6 or 8 inches, and do it NOW

The projection was simply beautiful. I watched the picture for at least half an hour before the operators knew I was in the house, and the speed left absolutely nothing to be desired. True, there was some light trouble during that time, but it acted like Brother Bausch said it was, and I believe him, due to a faulty core in the carbon, which is, of course, something entirely beyond the control of the operators.

And a remarkably convincing proof of the value of correct speed in projection occurred while I was watching the picture. At one point a marching column of soldiers appeared. Now as soon as the soldiers appeared the orchestra swung into a march, but the soldiers were marching too fast for the music. This was undoubtedly due to the camera, as the previous scenes had been projected at proper speed, but in the second scene the operator either reduced the speed of the projector, or the camera man had changed his speed. Anyhow, the soldiers were marching in perfect time, just as they would march in real life. The music then kept time with the marching, and the effect was simply wonderful. It was positively inspiring and brought a round of applause from the audience. Now if the speed of those marching soldiers had continued as it was in the first short scene, the music could not possibly have kept time, and the whole effect would have been utterly ruined.

Barring the light trouble, which I think was simply unfortunate and unavoidable, I would pronounce the projection at the Cumberland as being practically perfect, and the illumination of the screen—brilliancy and light tone—as good as I have looked at anywhere. Some managers who think they are getting good results on their screens, and some operators, too, for that matter, ought to go over and take a rubber at the Cumberland picture.

My compliments to Brothers Quinn, Mangan, Bausch and Howard. May their tribe increase.

As a last word I would again say, however, that men who are delivering the splendid results I saw on the screen at the Cumberland are deserving of better working conditions. Cut that back wall out, gentlemen, thus making an operating room of ample dimensions. It won't cost much, and it is entirely practical to do it, but whatever you do, cut out the bottom of those observation ports not less than 6 and preferably 10 inches, and stand not upon the order of doing it. You owe it to yourself and to your operators.

It's a Wonder.

L. F. Guimond, president of the Monticello Amusement Company, Monticello, N. Y., says:

> The transverter is in, and if it will stand up it is a plumb wonder. There never was a worse current for fluctuation than we have, and it is not noticed appreciably on the screen, even with both arcs going. We have enlarged the operating room, which is now 15 feet wide; also we have inaugurated a few new ideas, or ideas which we think are new, concerning which you will be informed within a short time.

All of which is interesting reading. The transverter is a good machine, as I have already said; also I have an ingrowing notion that it is going to make a little bit of history in current rectification in moving picture theaters before the story is all told.

Send Stubs.

N. C. Cotabish, General Sales Manager National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, with whom I took up the matter of deep carbon craters, asks for samples of carbon stubs which show this fault. Will operators who have experienced this particular trouble with National carbons kindly send two or three typical deep crater stubs to the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, attention Mr. N. C. Cotabish, together with a letter of explanation as to the effect on the screen?

I would also suggest that those using Speer or other carbons which develop this fault send samples to the manufacturers, because this particular fault is not confined to any one make of carbons.

Film Mender.

M. H. Granholt, Long Beach, Cal., sends in a rather crude sample of a film mender he is preparing to place on the market. The device is designed to be sold at $1.50, and seems to be a practical instrument. I could not, however, make any very intelligent comment on this particular piece of apparatus until I have seen the finished product.

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy in the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are inclosed. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in this department, $1.

Accurate Focussing of Cinematograph Lenses.

The first requisite for obtaining a sharply defined image on cine film is that the lens be accurately focussed. The poorest lens made will make a sharper image at its focus than the best lens made which is out of focus.

There is scarcely any other conclusion to be drawn than that the fuzzytype school of photography bas no place in cinematography. One might enter into a lengthy discussion as to why tbis is, but that is aside from the theme of this article.

Most cinematographers are prone to focus each scene upon the ground glass or upon the film for every different set up of the camera and many even focus between scenes in the same set taken at the same distance. This is decidedly wrong and a grievous waste of valuable time when it often occurs that the camera man used up from five to fifteen minutes of the entire producing company's valuable time in obtaining an accurate focus.

This is not a criticism of the photographer who composes his picture on the film aperture, although many take an unnecessarily long time for tbis operation also.

Tbe fact of tbe matter is that no man can focus as accurately every time as a well mounted lens can be calibrated for focus and the camera man who has not taken the time to accurately scale bis lens must be very inefficient in his focussing. Many of them do not seem to know that the focal distance of the lens is always the same for any object at a given distance from the camera. Others are content to work with a camera so ramshackle that even if they were to calibrate their lens mount it would not work the same two days in succession. A tape line measurement from the front of the camera takes but a moment and with the lens properly scaled on a solid mount the photographer is always sure of a sharp focus. The scale is almost indispensable to the topical operator whose work must often be made on the jump and be can soon learn to estimate witb his eyes within a few inches or feet of the distance of the principal figure that he is taking. A few feet away from the camera the depth of focus is so great that it is easy to set the lens quickly between fifteen or twenty feet and the infinity mark and be absolutely sure of a sharp focus and he must have very poor judgment indeed if be cannot soon learn to estimate distances under fifteen feet within a very few inches. The more careful studio worker can always verify his judgment with the tape measure and in many cases can, by a proper arrangement of his focussing device be able to change his focus as a figure advances or retreats in front of the camera.

In this day of multitudinous effects of moving cameras on trucks and wheels and slide ways and moving cranes, it is essential that the up-to-date worker be able to change his focus while taking pictures.

We shall soon have practical motor-driven cameras and gimbal panoramas which may be turned in any direction without the use of two panorama handles at cone, as is now necessary to produce a straight diagonal panorama. These are logical conclusions and even to-day many of the effects must be produced by two and even three or more working simultaneously with one camera; so that the simplification of manipulation should even be sought by the operator who wishes to keep in the front rank.

Here are a few simple directions for scaling or calibrating a lens mount.

Before starting to scale your mount give your camera a thorough looking over, making sure of the following points:

First.—That the film in its travel past the aperture plate or frame opening is always in flat contact with the opening; that there is no possibility of the pressure plate sliding askew in its seat on the gate and producing an uneven pressure against the film; that the side guides are not so close together that they will, by pressure against the edges of the film, cause it to belly or buckle; that the fingers, claws or pins that feed the film down for each frame are in perfect alignment and do not wrinkle the film by a diagonal downward pull, caused by some pin engaging and dragging the film down by a pull on one side only; that the gate tension is always sufficient to hold the film securely against the frame place, but not more firmly than necessary so as to cause needless friction.

It is well to mention here also that velvet lined tracks, pressure plates and gates are not only an abomination when trying to obtain accurate results in focussing, but are also great scratch and static breeders and should be replaced wherever possible with some hard, non-corrosive metal polished to a glass smoothness, as perfectly straight and flat as can be obtained, and with short tapers and rounded edges at all points where they receive tbe moving film.

Second.—That the parts of the camera which hold the flange of the lens mount should be so rigid as to eliminate any possibility of there being the minutest change in the distance between the frame aperture and the lens mount. Wood is far too liable to warp and bulge to be trusted for a lens front board and any camera with a wooden front board supporting the lens, should be changed to one of metal or other rigid material and firmly connected to the metal frame of the camera by metal struts or columns to which it may be firmly screwed or clamped. Bayonet joints are used for this purpose in many cameras and where they are used they should be frequently inspected to see that they have not worn and permitted play between the locking keys and the lens frame.

Tbird.—The back lash or play or lost motion in the focussing mount itself should be reduced to a minimum. In many cameras, especially those where tbe focussing is done from the back by a system of rods and connections, it is impossible to eliminate a considerable amount of this lost motion; in wbich case if it can be assured that this backlash is a constant factor, that is, always the same, it may be advisable to calibrate in both directions.

For example, suppose the camera was focussed upon an object fifteen feet away and one wished to change the focus to ten feet, if the backlash were considerable tbe pointer might be moved back to the scale mark for ten feet without moving the lens, in which case the camera would still be focussed at fifteen feet and to make the lens move to the rigbt focus for ten feet, the points would have to be pushed on to the mark for eight feet, although the backlash now being in the opposite direction would allow it to be brought back to the ten mark witbout moving the lens. As tbis backlash is generally a constant factor, the error produced by it is avoided by making two scales, one for the pointer when being turned in one direction and another for it wben turned in the opposite direction. Such a focussing device is, of course, more sensitive to wear tban any others and should be carefully checked for error at least once a month.

Having thus checked up the sources of error in tbe camera, we are now ready to scale our lens mount. For this we need a piece of very fine ground glass the same width as the film, a good focussing or small magnifying glass, a tape line, and a test chart. Lens testing charts may be obtained from any good optician: Bausch & Lomb or Wollensack Optical Company, both of Rochester, N. Y., each publisb good ones which they would probably be glad to send for ten cents postage. For our purpose, however, a newspaper witb some bold headlines will serve perfectly as well.

Set tbe camera up rigidly on the tripod and pin the newspaper or test chart against a well lighted wall, or if you can improvise some sort of light easel for the chart it will be much easier to move it accurately to the different distances tban to move the camera. Place a short strip of film in the gate of the camera, remove the front board and, with calipers, compasses, or a finely divided scale, make sure that the distance from the film to a steel straight edge held across the camera front is exactly the same as the distance from the straight edge to the ground surface of tbe ground glass when it is held at the aperture instead of tbe film. If there is any variation in this distance the film is eitber buckled or out of contact and the cause should be sought and remedied. After checking the film in this way for a second time, we may now feel reasonably safe in going ahead with our calibration.

First rack your lens out as far as it will go and with the ground glass in place and making sure of minute sharpness move the chart or the camera until the chart is in focus. Now with the tape line, measure the distance from the front board to the chart. This distance will be the closest that you can bring an object to your camera and have it remain in focus. This distance depends on the range of the focussing mount and is ordinarily one to three feet. If you wish to make closeups of small visiting cards or other small objects you can do so by using a supplementary lens like the kodak portrait lens or have a mechanic make you an extension ring one side of which fits the lens flange and tbe other side the lens mount. By the use of this you can extend the distance between the lens and the film and thereby the magnification whicb you can obtain.

With a sharp steel point mark tbis as the first point on your scale and the distance which it represents; then at successive greater distances, each carefully measured and recorded on your scale, complete your range of distances, 18 inches, 2 feet, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 12, 15, 20, 35 and infinity being a good range. Distances between these can be easily estimated as being proportionately between the nearest known distances on the scale, although for objects closer than three feet, unless your scale is marked in differences of a few inches, it is safer to use the ground glass; as the nearer the object the greater the change in tbe focal distance of the lens.

If you have followed these directions closely you can now be sure, with the aid of your tape measure, of getting your pictures in focus every shot.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Setting for "Jaffrey." Released by the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

(Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg, by special arrangements with G. Schrimer, Inc., music publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained free of charge by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cue where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title marked T, or a described action marked D. For instance: 8½ T "Bad news" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 42½ D "When Jaffrey sees Dora" is a description of action.

The scene of this story is laid in England with the exception of the opening, where two of the principal characters are in the Balkan States. The plot hinges about Jaffrey Chayne, a war correspondent, Doria, an English girl, and Liosha, a Balkan girl. Liosha is a wild product of the Balkan Mountains who marries Jaffrey's companion. Upon his death Jaffrey assumes protection of her and takes her to England. Doria marries Adrian Boldero, whom she believes to be a novelist of great genius. Jaffrey loves her and would do anything to please her. Liosha has come to have a great regard for her guardian, but it is not returned. Adrian dies and Jaffray discovers that the novel bearing his name was stolen. In order not to destroy Doria's illusions of her husband's greatness Jaffrey writes a novel which he publishes under Adrian's name. Later he proposes marriage but is flatly refused. He then takes an ocean journey with Liosha. Returning to England, he finds that Doria has discovered her husband's imposture and is willing to accept his proposal of marriage. He' however, has discovered the sterling worth of Liosha and the story closes with the assurance of their future happiness.

The musical interpretation depends upon the usage of the two themes as suggested:

THEME A is "The Old Mother," from Dvorak's "Gypsy Songs."

THEME B is "Love Song" by Flegier.

Time schedule: 84 minutes (six reels—about 5,600 feet).

The Organ.

By S. M. Berg and Norman Stuckey.

The organ is the largest and most powerful of musical instruments, and of great antiquity, trustworthy accounts reaching back to the 2nd Century B. C.

Up to the 10th Century A. D. the organ appears to have been a very primitive instrument, with a diatonic compass of two octaves at most; the pipes were all flue pipes, constructed in much the same manner as those at present. Reed pipes were not introduced until the fifteenth century.

As early as 980 we hear of an organ at Winchester, England, which had four hundred pipes and two manuals, each with a compass of twenty keys, and with ten pipes to each key.

The keys of the early organs were so broad, the whole action so clumsy, that in playing the plain-song melodies, the clenched fists or even the elbows were used to depress them.

Improvement has been steady, and chiefly due to German, English, French and American organ builders.

Formerly the wind of an organ was supplied by a blower and handle, the same as an ordinary pump, but in this advanced age, modern organs derive their wind supply from an electric motor.

The action of old organs—the tracker action—was extremely difficult to play, as much muscular power was required.

It would be impossible to play a tracker action organ an entire evening as some organists are expected to do now, who play for moving pictures.

The idea of applying electricity to the organ mechanism occured first to the English organist, Dr. H. J. Gauntlett and the first attempt at an electro action was patented by him in 1852. The idea was developed by the English organ builder Charles Spackman Baker, in collaboration with the French organist Dr. Peschard. The first Electro-pneumatic organ was created by them in 1867 in the church of St. Augustin, Paris. Hil-borne L. Roosevelt, the American organ builder, was the first in America to use the idea successfully, which he did in Grace Church, New York in 1878. Here the organ in the western gallery was connected with a new one in the chancel at a distance of one hundred and fifty feet, and with the Echo organ in the lofty roof. More than twenty miles of electric wire is used yet the response is instantaneous.

Many who had the pleasure of hearing the wonderful organ at the Exposition in San Francisco last year will recall the variety of combinations used. This organ is one of the late types of instruments whose advancement has been made possible by the electric-pneumatic action and other electrical appliances and inventions.

The reliability of the modern electric action has been demonstrated and all the large and important organs that are being built are equipped with an electric-pneumatic action. Such organs have the advantage of occupying but a small space, as all the wires that are necessary for the control of a large organ may be formed into a cable the size of the wrist. The console can, therefore, be at any distance from the instrument, the response being instantaneous. This is a great advantage for the theater as the console can be made movable.

The coupling of the keyboards is now operated by a direct electric connection, the touch being exceptionally light which remains the same whenever the full organ is used. Unlike the tracker action, the electric pneumatic organ is not subject to climatic impairment, nor to any atmospheric influences or changes.

It is most important that the organist should make a thorough study of the structure of an organ and its mechanical accessories in connection with various effects. The knowledge of the physical conditions of pipe speech will greatly assist you in the keen discrimination of organ tones. A very important development for the benefit of organists is the Adjustable Combination Piston, made possible by the employment of electricity. By the use of this invention the organist is enabled to completely registrate his music in a few moments before beginning to play and while he is seated at the console so that it is not necessary to remove his eyes from the music nor his hands from the keys in order to secure instantly any combination or solo effects of which the instrument is capable. This is an important feature in organs for moving picture theaters as many quick changes of combinations are necessary to the organist who interprets pictures conscientiously.

The admirable capabilities of the organ for supporting vocal music, and the solemn dignity of its character, have always led to its association with divine worship but recent improvements and inventions have so rapidly followed that the organ has become almost a new instrument. A few years ago when music for the theater was in the experimental stage it was found that an orchestra could not continue playing for an indefinite period without intermission and when the players stopped, music of the same volume of sound was required so as not to distract an audience. The organ was therefore suggested as the logical solution. Then began a serious study of the requirements of picture theaters. New organs were designed and built embodying possible requirements until today many maintain that the organ is the most satisfactory single instrument for the interpretation of moving pictures.

An Elaborate Fashion Play.

"BEAUTY and the Beast," a fashion playlet based on the famous old time fairy tale, and incidently the most elaborate production of its kind ever produced has just been finished under the direction of H. E. Hancock, exclusively for release through the International Film Service, Inc.

Mineta Timayo.

Through his personal acquaintance with George J. Gould, Mr. Hancock was able to avail himself of the use of Georgian Court, the Gould estate in Lakewood, N. J., for his exterior scenes. It is well known that Georgian Court is considered to be the finest of all the millionaire estates in the east.

In order that the interior scenes would fit in well with the magnificence of the exteriors a special set of unsurpassed beauty and impressiveness was built for this playlet representing the palace of the sleeping beauty. Most of the scenes outside were taken in the sunken gardens of the Gould estate and the cast was made up of the most beautiful models obtainable. The gowns, which were furnished entirely by the firm of Maison Maurice, Fifth avenue, New York, represented thousands of dollars.

Miss Mineta Timayo, who is admitted to be the most beautiful model in New York and who is under an exclusive contract with the International Film Service, appears in the star part as the sleeping beauty in the play. The clothes worn by Miss Timayo alone represent a retail value of over $2,000.

The film which is now being assembled by Mr. Hancock will be released in the near future in one of the special split releases that have become one of the main features of the International Film Service, Inc.

Marguerite Courtot Joins Famous Players.

Popular Film Favorite to Co-star With Owen Moore in Adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's "Rolling Stones."

MARGUERITE COURTOT, one of the most popular of the younger motion picture favorites, has been engaged by the Famous Players Film Company, and will be starred by this concern in the Paramount program. Her first appearance under the new auspices will be as co-star with Owen Moore in an adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's great comedy-drama, "Rolling Stones."

Miss Courtot has been a motion picture star for four years and in these days of incessant changes has made an enviable record for herself by remaining with the Kalem Company for three of the four years. She later joined the Gaumont Company, which she left to join the Famous Players.

One of the unique features of Miss Courtot's remarkable success upon the screen lies in the fact that she had never been on the stage in her life. She was originally selected for motion picture work because of her striking beauty which manifested itself at such an early age that when she was but four years old she won the first prize offered by the New York Journal to settle the controversy as to whether American or English children were the more beautiful, thereby covering her British adversaries with confusion and envy.

Harrison Fisher, one of the most famous connoiseurs of feminine beauty among our celebrated illustrators, selected Miss Courtot as the model for his "Girlie" cover for the May number of Cosmopolitan Magazine in 1901.

Fortunately, Miss Courtot's very sensible mother realized that her daughter would require something more than mere beauty if she were to make her mark in this world and accordingly put her through a rigorous course of education, which included a year and a half of study in Switzerland. As a result, Miss Courtot is a well-read, highly intelligent little miss, who enters upon her various roles with a complete understanding of their significance—a fact which is very apparent from the manner in which she develops them on the screen.

As her name indicates, Miss Courtot is of French parentage and it is one of the traditions of her home that only French shall be spoken there among the members of the household. This is one of the rules laid down by her mother in order to preserve her knowledge of the language. Miss Courtot, though she objects to the word "ardent," is nevertheless a devoted disciple of the outdoor life and is very fond of tennis. Motoring and dancing take up a great deal of her attention.

Miss Courtot does not aspire to play heavy dramatic roles, preferring simple stories of country life and light comedy-dramas to other vehicles. She does not object to playing the rustic lad, if necessary, as she proved by scoring a great success in "The Barefoot Boy."

In "Rolling Stones" Miss Courtot will be under the clever direction of Del Henderson, whose first production for the Famous Players will thus present as co-stars two screen favorites of long standing in Miss Courtot and Owen Moore.

A CORRECTION.

It was erroneously stated in a recent issue of The Moving Picture World that Edward Hines was now the owner of the Cozy, Lyric, and Princess theaters in Austin, Minn., and that F. F. Latta had purchased the Lyric. As a matter of fact the Lyric has been in the possession of the Cozy Company, Inc., of Austin, for the past two years. Mr. Latta is president and treasurer of that company. Mr. Hines does not own any of the theaters mentioned. They are all owned and operated by the Cozy Company, Inc., which is also building another moving picture theater to be known as the New Park, which is to be opened in October next. S. G. Latta is secretary of the Cozy Company

HORSLEY WANTS SCENARIOS.

It is announced by David Horsley that he is in the market for scenarios of the five-reel length, full continuity form, suitable to Crane Wilbur. Dramas of the sociological and psychological nature being desired. Prompt consideration will be given all scripts sent in and payment will be made upon acceptance. Due to the return of Margaret Gibson, the dainty little star, to stories of the five-reel length scenarios written around her will also be given attention.

Sixth Exhibitors' Convention

Thursday's Events—July 13.

The morning session was devoted entirely to routine work. A good deal of this routine work consisted of the report of the committee on the constitution and by-laws of which Chas. Phillips, of Wisconsin, was the chairman. The most material changes proposed by the report of the committee and accepted by the convention had reference to the national vice-presidents. Mr. Phillips said that the committee had carefully examined this matter, and had come to the conclusion that the national vice-presidents were superfluous and served no particular purpose. He proposed, on behalf of the committee, to substitute in place of the section dealing with national vice-presidents a new section giving all the duties and responsibilities that had heretofore devolved on the national vice-presidents to the respective State presidents. Another important change was the addition of a new proposal to article 3. The new proposal reads as follows:

> "There shall be a laws and legislative committee composed of five (5) members who shall be elected by the convention."

The per capita tax was reduced from $2 to $1. It was also provided in the report of the committee that the committee of credentials hereafter shall consist of one member from each State selected by the State delegation. This latter part of the report was rejected by the convention, while the other amendments were carried unanimously. The reading of the report, which was a lengthy one, took considerable time, and the discussion on the various proposed changes was often protracted and technical.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session was the star event of the convention. A committee consisting of Walter W. Irwin, Wm. M. Seabury, Paul H. Cromelin and L. L. Levine appeared before the convention to plead for the adoption of the proposals drafted by the Delmonico Conference. The first speaker to be heard in support of the plans outlined at the Delmonico Conference was Mr. Irwin. He said:

Gentlemen of the Convention: In behalf of the sub-committee appointed by the Committee at Large on the organization of an association embracing the entire motion picture industry, I desire to express our appreciation of your courtesy in extending to us the privilege of the floor of your convention.

On this occasion, I am not addressing you as an officer of a company, nor as a representative of any particular branch of the industry, nor as a committee of any clique or faction, but solely as a representative of upwards of 120 gentlemen, from all of the branches of the great art and business of motion pictures, who seek the welfare of the whole industry, and who believe that its protection and promotion can only be brought about by proper and equitable organization.

At a luncheon held in New York, June 8th, largely attended by representatives of all of the branches of the industry, including your National Secretary, Mr. Delves, and the officers of the various state and local exhibitor organizations, a resolution was unanimously passed in support of the principle of organization.

Remarks and discussions which preceded the passage of this resolution, clearly demonstrated that everyone connected with the industry is of one mind upon the proposition that the time has now arrived when an industry so important to the public, so large in the number of its employees, and with such extensive investments, can no longer afford to continue devoid of organization for protection and promotion; but on the contrary must organize for the purpose of permitting us to present a solid front to our common enemies, and to gain the benefit of our combined influence.

In fact, it was recognized that the industry not only owes this duty to itself, but to the public, in order that the chief means of public amusement and education shall not be hampered or stunted in its development.

No other industry has so advanced in leaps and bounds to prosperity and a hold upon the public, and at the same time been so utterly devoid of knowledge of itself, or acquaintance with its personnel, and of influence in its own behalf.

Until recently a barrier has existed between the various branches of the industry, particularly between the two great branches, producers and exchangemen on the one part, and the exhibitors on the other, by which, instead of doing business with mutual confidence and co-operation, most transactions were conducted with commercial enmity, and consequently, at an economic sacrifice, and the industry has been torn by jealousy, suspicion and misunderstanding.

Such a condition leaves any industry open to attack by those who would destroy; but these destructionists are a blessing in disguise, for every young industry must go through a period of uncertainty, of suspicion and of misunderstanding; only to become united by enemies, common to all.

Invariably a common enemy forces those who have dealt at arms length to become acquainted, and acquaintance, in a majority of instances, leads to an understanding, to a settlement of differences, to co-operation and to mutual confidence and respect.

I know that it is apparent to you gentlemen that the time has arrived in this industry when every branch must consider itself an important member of the motion picture family. It must be self-evident that our domestic disputes and trials ought to be settled within the family circle instead of being displayed to those who would take advantage of them. That wherever a question arises which affects the entire industry, our attitude towards it ought to be determined by a majority vote. When we appear as a house divided against itself, regardless of which side must be right or wrong, we weaken the entire industry. So it has seemed to a great many, that if each branch of the industry, and each organization in any branch of the industry could be brought into association by which we could present for discussion and deliberation all questions affecting the industry as a whole, that the minority in all instances, after a full and free discussion, ought to be willing, and would be willing, to abide by the rule of the majority.

Everyone of us, at times, has been in the minority, convinced that we were right, only to subsequently learn that the majority was right. As a matter of fact, the majority very seldom goes wrong.

It likewise must be self-evident to the exhibitors that neither their national association nor their state or local associations can be as effective in matters pertaining to the industry as a whole, as they would be if we were working in conjunction with all of the other members of the motion picture family. In any event it has become perfectly apparent to the other branches of the industry, that they cannot produce the desired results in behalf of the whole industry, except by the co-operation of every branch, including the exhibitors with their tremendous influence extending over the entire country. This has been proved time and again. So far no organization in any single branch of the industry, exhibitors or otherwise, has been effective enough in itself to produce the desired results, although in many instances good has come from their efforts.

For instance, we have just escaped the Cristman-Wheeler Bill by a narrow margin in New York, and we only made that escape through an appeal to the Governor by the whole industry. Had the industry been at work as a whole from the beginning, that bill never would have gotten out of the Assembly, and we would not have been forced to a desperate effort at the last moment. In fact, the bill was so absurd that, had the industry, as a whole, brought its provisions and explained its effect to a man of the intelligence of Speaker Sweet, it probably would not have been reported from the committee. The same remarks apply to Ohio, Kansas and Maryland.

And, if we get together as sensible business men, and bury the jealousies, suspicions and animosities of children, we will be able to cause the revocation of the censorship legislation in those states.

For these above reasons, those at the luncheon on June 8th constituted themselves a Committee at Large for bringing into association each branch of the industry for protection and promotion through concerted influence and effort. A Committee of Twelve was appointed to endeavor to work out a plan which would embody each branch of the industry, and which would be fair and equitable to all alike.

This sub-committee formulated a plan which was presented at a second luncheon last week and unanimously approved.

The plan, instead of attempting to destroy or weaken any existing organization, such as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has for its foundation the fostering and strengthening of your organization and of any similar organizations that may come into existence, for it was the belief of the committee that such an organization as yours ought to be aided and encouraged, so that it will attain its greatest effectiveness and have for its membership, all of the exhibitors of the country. In fact, it takes for its example, the national and state governments, by which each branch shall govern itself, shall determine all questions within itself, just as do the states, shall be encouraged and helped to strength and influence, and shall only be governed by a majority of the entire body in instances affecting the industry as a whole; just as the national government acts in behalf of all the people when all are affected or threatened; and at the same time the plan furnishes a channel through which each branch may become acquainted with the others and an amicable adjustment of internal differences effected; for it is felt that all reasonable men need is a means through which to understand the viewpoints and difficulties of each other, in order to arrive at a fair disposition of questions in controversy.

In fact, this plan proposes that no exhibitor shall become a member of the associated branches of the industry except by joining the Motion Picture League of America, and it is believed that if this association of the branches, this federation, is brought to its proper strength and influence, that there will be no exhibitor, big or little, who will not want to have a voice in the affairs of the whole industry, and who, therefore, will be compelled to join the Exhibitors' League of America in order to give expression to his views and exert his influence.

Mr. Irwin concluded amid applause. He had been listened to with utmost attention and it was clear that his plea was producing a great impression. He was followed by Mr. Seabury and Mr. Cromelin, who were rather brief in their remarks, pointing out that the previous speaker had covered the ground with much thoroughness. Mr. Levine of Brooklyn also spoke in support of the Delmonico proposals. Mr. Levine was the only exhibitor to do so. At this juncture, Mr. Rembusch of Indiana asked for the floor, but when the convention limited him to five minutes, he smiled and declared that in such a short time he could not do justice to his subject, and he therefore contented himself with a very brief comment on the situation. Carl H. Pierce was invited to the platform and introduced a number of prominent Paramount personages, among them the president, Hiram Abrams, who made a brief and pointed speech, and Wm. L. Sherry, John C. Flinn, who appeared as the personal representative of Mr. Lasky, and who was applauded. A large number of prominent Paramount exchange men were also introduced and one after another arose and bowed to the convention. Quite a commotion was caused by an incident which immediately followed these peaceful and perfunctory proceedings.

The redoubtable Louis J. Selznick, of the Clara Kimball Young Company, appeared on the platform and was greeted with applause and a volley of questions. The one question which arose above the din was this, "Tell us about the $100 a day proposition." Mr. Selznick smiled and professed his willingness to spend the time of the convention and his own time in illustrating. He proceeded to do so and presently found himself pronouncing a passionate eulogy upon the merits of his films. No one stopped him and he thoroughly enjoyed his task when at last it struck President Herrington that the convention was being used as a valuable advertising medium whereupon he requested Mr. Selznick to speak on topics of more general interest. Mr. Selznick smiled happily and absolutely cool and unruffled declined the opportunity to make a general speech and with a remarkable bow he descended from the platform. He was followed by Marcus Loew, who immediately went into an autobiographic recital. He spoke of the early days of the industry and of his own adventures, trials and tribulations. When he had concluded his reminences he assured the convention that he would be glad to do anything in his power, whereupon from every delegation on the floor came the cry "Join the organization."

This concluded the afternoon proceedings and after a committee of twenty had been appointed to report on the proposals of the Delmonico Conference an adjournment followed. The committee of twenty, whcih consisted of the six members of the committee on resolutions and fourteen special committeemen, immediately went into session and had a lively discussion for the rest of the afternoon and evening. At 6 o'clock the heat of the room and the excitement of the debate made an adjournment advisable and it was decided to hold a night session. The night session lasted until the early hours of the morning and resulted in a divided report, 15 of the members of the committee voting to accept the proposals of the Delmonico Conference and five voting against the acceptance.

Friday's Events—July 14.

The first order of business on Friday morning was the reading of reports from the national officers. The reports were approved and filed. The president's report was as follows:

Gentlemen: As president of our league, I wish to say, that when I was elected as the head of your league July, 1916, there was at that time states affiliated with our national league, and small prospects of securing any more members, and as disrupted as was our organization, the former secretary, W. R. Wilson, refused to turn over the books and accessories of his office, in that way making it impossible for the officers of your league to start out in any satisfactory way on the work of reconstruction; but I am pleased to say that our organization is better today and is built on a stronger foundation than at any time in its history, and I wish to thank the members of the executive board and the many exhibitors who have helped to make this possible.

Now during the past year there have been many things in the form of legislation detrimental to our industry that would work a hardship on us exhibitors, and your officers have never been found wanting, as when it was for them to be there, they were always on the firing line, and I am proud to say that on the Smith-Hughes Censor Bill before Congress, the exhibitors were united in the opposition to this bill. We cannot say the same for the manufacturers, and I am satisfied that if it were not for the action of the league, you would have had saddled upon you another foreign imposition, in the form of a tax on the gross receipts of your theater, and I am sorry to say that such legislation was put forth by an organization representing part of this industry.

The treasurer's report submitted by Peter Jeup showed a total receipt for the year up to July 13, 1916, of $1,812.90, which, with a balance from the previous year of $775.55, gave the league a total of $2,688.45 to work with. Of this sum $1,713.10 had been disbursed, which left a balance of $875.45.

The report of the secretary covered the same ground as that of the treasurer.

After the reports of the national officers had been accepted and filed, a resolution was passed thanking the four members of the committee on education at Washington, who had submitted a minority report opposing federal censorship. The members are: Frederick W. Dallinger, Massachusetts; Edmond Platt, New York; W. W. Rucker, Illinois, and Caleb Powers, Kentucky. A resolution was introduced by Mr. Megown, of Cleveland, for the oppointment of a general manager of the next national exposition, who is to furnish a bond of $10,000. The resolution was carried.

It was decided unanimously to send to Congress a protest against the proposed imposition of a new tax on motion picture theaters.

There was a revival of resolutions all around. One resolution provided for a protest against asking exhibitors to pay for a serial which might start out well and finish poorly. It was adopted. Another resolution denounced legalized censorship and condemned in very emphatic terms the attitude of certain producers who had publicly favored a legalized form of Federal censorship. Before the vote on this resolution was put, Max Stearn, of Columbus, Ohio, arose and claimed the floor. Upon inquiry the fact developed that Mr. Stearn was not a member of the organization and had not made any application for membership. Mr. Phillips, of Wisconsin, said that if Mr. Stearn would make application for membership the convention would be glad to hear from him, but the convention could not afford to be responsible to the public for utterances made on the floor of the convention by non-members. A point of order was made against Mr. Stearn and immediately sustained by the chair. Mr. Stearn declined to make application for membership.

Upon motion of Judge Tugwell, of California, the convention took up the election of a board of directors which is to represent the exhibiting interest in the new organization formed under the jurisdiction of the Delmonico conference. The following were elected: Thomas Furniss, M. A. Choynski, Frank Rembusch, Charles Phillips, Louis Blumenthal, L. L. Levine, A. P. Tugwell, Samuel Trigger, Peter Jeup and Frederick J. Herrington. These ten were elected out of about twenty-two candidates.

Friday Afternoon Session.

When the convention reassembled in the afternoon, every delegate sat expectantly in his seat. The usual buzz and murmur which defies the chairman's gavel at every convention were conspicuous by their absence. The sergeant-at-arms, the genial James Gilosky, of Minnesota, began to scrutinize every man who wanted to enter and the doors of the convention, which had stood wide open, were now closed and carefully guarded. It was plain that the big event of the convention was approaching—the election of national officers. The campaign managers of the various candidates fidgeted nervously in their seats while the candidates themselves could not entirely supress their emotions. There was a momentary relaxation when Mr. Choynski, of Chicago, arose and offered a motion to the effect that only one national exposition a year was to be held and that the national league would under no circumstances endorse or support any other exposition wherever held. Mr. Choynski made a telling speech in favor of this motion.

"The holding of so many expositions," he said, "is altogether unfair to the producers. They are asked to contribute both money and their stars to make these conventions or expositions successful. How can they make pictures if their stars are chased all over the country? The producers, of course, do not want to refuse and it puts them in a very delicate and difficult position. I think it is only right that this convention show its good faith to the producer by helping them out of his dilemma. We are going to provide them with an alibi if they are hereafter solicited either for money or for stars by expositions other than the national exposition."

Mr. Sweeney, of Chicago, spoke strongly in support of this motion. He said he hoped that such a thing as having three expositions, such as was the case this year, would never occur again, because it was obviously unfair to the producers. Mr. Phillips, of Wisconsin, was the only one who opposed the motion, which was carried unanimously.

In the meantime the expectancy of the delegates had risen to the point of impatience. Judge Tugwell applied the safety valve at the psychological moment when he announced that the convention would presently proceed to the election of national officers and that nominations were in order. The judge kept the platform after he had made this announcement and a brief pause followed. Everyone was eager to see and hear what the next step might be when the speaker told the convention that he had to make a preliminary announcement.

"I have been requested," he said, "to say on behalf of one man who has been prominently mentioned as a possible candidate, that he will under no circumstances accept the nomination. In fact, he has asked me to tell you that if you will nominate and elect him, he will resign immediately and leave the hotel and the city. No one more than I regrets this fact, for I am referring to Thomas Furniss, of Minnesota. (Applause.) His friends upon the floor of this convention are many and his fitness for the great office has impressed itself on all who have come in contact with him. I am, indeed, sorry that he has taken such an attitude, but I can do no more than announce it to you with expressions of regret in which, I am sure, all of you share."

Again the speaker paused. From the back rows came a subdued clamor and presently all over the hall there were cries of "Nominations!" ( The speaker now took his seat and President Herrington turning to the alphabetical list of states before him called out: "California." Judge Tugwell immediately arose and in a brief but very effective speech nominated Frederick J. Herrington. There was much applause in which the entire convention took part. The references to Mr. Herrington's faith in organization and his spirit of unselfishness and sacrifice were warmly applauded.

Next came Florida, which passed. Profound silence followed the call of Illinois. Illinois had shown considerable political dexterity in marshalling its delegates, and no one really knew where Illinois stood. Mr. Choynski arose and said, "Illinois passes." This caused the first surprise of the convention, for it had been freely rumored that Illinois would give Rembusch at least a complimentary vote. Indiana followed and Dr. J. M. Rhodes nominated Frank Rembusch. The name of Rembusch was cheered. Iowa came next. Iowa, too, had been committed to a certain candidate by Dame Rumor. Many had believed that Iowa would either favor Rembusch or Herrington. Next followed Michigan, and the big chairman of that delegation, Mr. Kleist, announced the support of Herrington. Massachusetts passed, followed in rapid succession by Minnesota, Missouri and Mississippi.

The next great demonstration came when Lee A. Ochs, the president of the New York organization, was placed in nomination by Samuel Trigger. It had been felt that Ochs had been gathering strength with the passing of every hour. It had been common gossip that dozens of delegates had been converted to the Ochs candidacy after their arrival in Chicago. It goes without saying that his name was greeted by applause. The convention, however, was too intent upon the coming result of the election to lose much time in cheering, for it was felt all through the hall that with the naming of Ochs by New York a critical moment had been reached and that the next few minutes would decide the question which had been asked by everybody since the convention opened on Monday.

Trigger's speech was brief, dealing entirely with the practical qualifications of Mr. Ochs. When he sat down everybody knew that Lee Ochs was not a "hurrah candidate," but that he was taken very seriously and that his personality was the most interesting of any of the candidates. If there had been any betting it would at this moment surely have favored the chances of Ochs. Delegate Brophy, of Oklahoma, who looks as if he were ready to step into a cowboy picture without notice, and who is one of the most popular men on the floor, relieved the tension for a moment when he announced, "Oklahoma passes." For a second or two there seemed to be a revulsion in favor of Herrington as Ohio and Pennsylvania announced their support of his candidacy. Wisconsin passed. A motion was then passed to close the nominations for president and this motion was carried unanimously.

Before the balloting began it was evident that Rembusch would be eliminated at an early stage and that the contest lay between Ochs and Herrington, and that there was very little to choose between them. The suspense and uncertainty of the situation produced a good deal of subdued excitement in the hall.

And now came the great dramatic moment of the convention. Choynski, of Illinois, lean and tall, witty and forceful, took the floor. Everyone knew that upon the position of Illinois, as he would presently proclaim it, would depend the election. No man ever had a more attentive audience than Choynski and he seemed to thoroughly realize and relish the situation. He gazed about the hall with just a suspicion of a smile and then he set himself for his task. His face grew tense, once or twice he braced himself and then in his sharpest and most incisive manner he plunged into his work.

"Illinois," he said, "favors the man who has done things. I give all credit to Mr. Herrington for what he has done, but Lee A. Ochs is the man who has opened the doors that were shut and barred, and he has fought the battle which made it possible for us to be here. Illinois casts its vote for Lee A. Ochs, of New York."

A tempest of cheers swept through the hall. Everybody was glad that the tension was over and the gladness manifested itself in one noisy demonstration after another. Iowa then announced itself for Ochs; David G. Rogers, of Minnesota following suit, casting Minnesota's vote for Ochs. Isenberg, of Mississippi, did the same, and then came Massachusetts, which was pledged to Ochs by Horstman. Brophy added Oklahoma to the Ochs column. Wisconsin joined. Rembusch, of Indiana, now arose, announced his withdrawal from the race and the support of Indiana for Lee A. Ochs. All eyes were turned on Herrington. It was evident that he was defeated; it was known that he had made a strong campaign for re-election and that he had felt himself entitled to another term. That Herrington was laboring under a great strain was evident to every delegate, and it was likewise clear that he had the respect and sympathy of the entire convention. Some feared that in the bitterness of defeat he might force a protracted fight, engendering possible resentment. California, Michigan, Ohio and Pennsylvania were known to be with Herrington to the last ditch. No doubt, there was a struggle in Herrington's mind, but however bitter it may have been, it was very brief. He relieved the general tension by announcing his withdrawal. After he had thanked the men who had stood by him, he paid a generous tribute to Lee Ochs and spoke feelingly of the battle they had fought shoulder to shoulder. Every sentence was punctuated with a cheer. When he finally announced his formal withdrawal and proclaimed his willingness to work as a private in the ranks, the convention went wild with enthusiasm. Three cheers and a tiger were given time and again, the demonstration lasting fully three minutes.

The rest of the national officers were elected by acclamation, as follows: First vice president, A. P. Tugwell, of California; second vice president, William Isenberg, of Mississippi; secretary, William J. Sweeney, of Illinois; treasurer, Peter J. Jeup, of Michigan. In response to persistent demands for a speech the president-elect mounted the platform and briefly announced that his policy would be one of action. He said he proposed to bring the league up to 100 per cent. efficiency. He said he was an advocate of open booking. He pleaded with the trade press for a fair deal to the exhibitor. He also asked for two more men on the executive committee, a request which the convention complied with at once. Mr. Ochs was listened to with great attention.

Saturday's Events—July 15.

Last day proceedings were brief. In the morning William A. Brady, by special invitation, addressed the convention at some length. His speech was well received and evoked considerable applause. He said:

Mr. President, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Ladies and Gentlemen: In the first place, I want to thank you for paying me the honor of bringing me here. I deem it a great compliment. First, because it is an assemblage of men and women interested in probably the greatest movement that the theatrical business has ever known. I feel perhaps that too much importance is put on the value of what I might say here this morning, but, still, at the same time, I can say for myself that I have been in the theatrical business since the year 1888, and that, I believe, is something like 28 years. During that time I have held my own in any branch of the business that I have tackled. What I believe has been discussed in your convention during the past week is the question of organization, and I might look back a few years and still see the same things that have happened in the matter of theatrical organization during the past few years.

The first organization took place about 1890 in the Madison Square Garden theater in New York. At that time there was no theatrical man's note in the United States that was worth the paper it was written on.

We knew no club life, no home life, no position in any community in the United States. We were looked upon as vagabonds, strolling players. Since that time, the industry in the United States has grown until now I am told by expert people that it represents the fifth greatest industry in the United States. In 1890 it was ruined by a clique, a clique who at that moment was scheming to control all the theaters of the United States and to whip every producing manager in the United States to his knees and force him to stand by their dictation. It lived about three months. Eight years after that another organization was formed, known as the Theatrical Producing Managers' Association, and for a time it represented every branch of the theatrical industry in the United States.

People in the motion picture industry at that time had just attempted to have passed at Washington a bill which permitted them to appropriate any successful stage play without the formality of paying for it. The question of copyright came up. A bill was introduced in Congress with a joker in it. To turn any play into a picture and be forced to pay a fine of only $100 in order to use that play. Kalem wanted to film my stage play, "Way Down East." Right enough if they could have gotten away with it. It was simply a fight of two classes of people in the theatrical business and another. We found that this bill was to be sneaked through and a number of us went to Washington and met one of the strongest paid lobbies that has ever assembled in Washington. Every leading company in the motion picture business in America was represented. We were worked to death, and for a week we dealt with small people, people whom nobody knew, but on Friday, when it looked as if we were beaten and it would become a law, we sent to New York, and five or six prominent men, headed by Augustus Thomas, George Broadhurst and other men of national reputation, and in just an hour by the clock we licked that legislation to a finish and the Senate committee asked how we wanted the bill arranged. They said:

"Surely, you will allow that the motion picture business should be protected as well as yours."

We replied: "There is no reason why men writing motion picture scenarios should not have as much right to copyright them as we have for the stage."

Now, I am just bringing this thing up to show you the value of organization. Last week I was called into conference by Henry Morgenthau, President Wilson's campaign manager. Mr. Morgenthau said:

"Mr. Brady, you are well known as a supporter of Mr. Wilson. Would you suggest how we can use the field of motion pictures in this campaign?" I said, "Have you had any other suggestions?"

"Yes," he said, "we were told if we make pictures of Mexico, the President riding here, and there, etc., that perhaps the motion picture men would buy these pictures and exhibit them."

Buy them! Can you imagine us buying advertising from them when we are the one profession in the United States that is being persecuted to death by hostile legislation. I said to him: "I can suggest one scheme whereby motion pictures can be made to help you. Have President Wilson make a series of Kindergarten speeches; let him make them and we will illustrate what he is talking about and in one month you can have President Wilson in every water tank town and he can address all the people in every part of the United States personally."

Now, I am bringing this question to you so that you people will know that you possess in you the might of presenting any question or fight any question that is brought up to hurt you the same way as the President could address every man and woman in the United States by motion pictures. Nobody ever lost anything by being known as a fighter and fighting spirit can only be brought about by organizations. When I say organizations I not only refer to exhibitors, and I will go still further than this. I read in the paper about a producer who said that he believed that the actors and actresses should be put in a contract class with baseball players properly organized, they could wipe out the reserve clause in ten days. Therefore I suggest that actors and directors be admitted into this organization so that those men and women can be in touch with the industry and realize what they are doing to themselves, their industry, their act. I remember one director who, less than two years ago, worked for me for $40 a week and who is now getting $450 a week. The day will come, if I live, when I will see him with a dirty collar and unblackened shoes, standing in Long Acre Square, looking toward Heaven and he will say:

"Oh, if good old Motion Picture Days would only come back again."

Don't let them come here, gentlemen. Send a committee to Washington. Demand a hearing. We are human beings, business men, and we deserve square treatment. Don't put anything on your screen that you don't want your own daughter or your own child, to see. I introduce into your organization a decree that any man who maliciously makes a dirty picture be ostracised. The other day in Long Branch I met a big man, a theatrical manager. He said to me, "Bill, we have got a picture in New York, the dirtiest thing I have ever seen—and if we can get it by the censor board we will clean up." For God's sake stand for cleanliness. Stand for decency. Never in the history of the theatrical business since 1880, and no man in the United States knows more about this than I do, can say with safer assurance that there never was any period in the theater business in the United States in which malicious plays were produced that lasted over two or three months and the producers suffered for it afterwards.

You may present a dirty picture on Tuesday night, but you will hurt your clean pictures for the rest of the week. You are not only disgracing yourself in your own community, but disgracing the organization. I came to Chicago with a little girl and I was amazed to see a couple of thousand people at the depot waiting to see her get off the train. What does she stand for? I refer to Miss Mary Pickford, and she stands for cleanliness. Now, gentlemen, I come to the most serious part of my talk. The business part of it. On my way out here I had opportunity to read the Chicago newspapers and in every large advertisement I read these words, "Death to the program."

What does the program represent? If you run six features a week, you are getting productions which cost at the minimum of $150,000. The actual cost of these features is not less than $25,000. The man in Peoria, Illinois, who plays Metro, Paramount, Triangle, World; plays them for the first time, is getting material which is costing somebody $150,000 a week, and lo and behold, here comes this Lochinvar who tells "Put the program out of business." Are you going to depend upon him? Put the program out of business! He did put one program out of business. I like the man. In one way he is one of the most brilliant men that in my thirty years I have ever met.

The best trader keeps his word, when he can, and when he wants to, but if you can't pay $30 or $40 a night now to the companies who are putting their business into your hands, what is the result? The product decreases 300 per cent., and therefore, by the natural law of averages, the price will increase 300 per cent. Therefore, I say to you gentlemen, that the program is the spine of the business. These reputable men who are working day and night and who are paying money out on a gamble are doing so to please you also. Stick to the ship that carried you over the danger points until the ship starts to sink, but don't get on another ship that may sink a damn sight faster than that one. I don't know whether anybody else has mentioned this thing in this convention. The motion picture business has been using up material so fast that an alarming condition is going to appear presently. In reading the criticisms of exhibitors I find one line constantly appearing: "We don't want romance, we want modern stories." There are just so many modern stories. So many things can happen between a woman and two men or two women and a man. Don't tell your branch man "We don't want romance." Get your public used to it so that you can put Dickens Shakespeare, Thackeray, Tolstoi, etc., before them, then you open up to the motion picture industry an enormous field of stories, once you bring them out of the hysteria of perils of divorce, the poor old shop girl and when Nellie left home. I remember when every murderer, divorce, shop-lifter and every girl who had done something sensational had a play written around them. Result: One Saturday night something hit the theater placing these things. Davis and Keogh had 21 companies on tour doing these plays and one Saturday night something hit them and the following March the 21 companies disappeared.

Therefore, I say to you gentlemen in conclusion, look up, don't look down. Don't let anybody walk on your toes. Fight to a finish. Fight for clean stories. Fight the crooked, grafting politicians through your screen. Then you will get attention. Then you will get the representation in Congress you are entitled to and which you ought to have. You will get more by fighting than by watchful waiting. We won't go for Mexico, because in Mexico we would be fighting a lot of half-starved greasers, but here we have to fight a lot of fat, greasy, miserable grafters, Judas Iscariots who hold the fat palms of friendship out while the other is hidden and holds a dirk with which to stab you to the very vitals.

Mr. Brady's speech was received with close attention and at its conclusion genuine appreciation was expressed by the delegates assembled.

The last moments of the convention were given over to a few routine matters. The delegates listened to the reading of the resolutions to be sent to Congress, the text of which sets forth the duty of constructive statesmanship to foster every educational and civilizing agency and therefore the screen ought to be as free from taxation as the book or the newspaper. The proposed tax amounts to one-half of one per cent. of the gross receipts of every motion picture theater. On Thursday a conference will be held in New York by all of the branches of the amusement world to take concerted action.

The next convention will be held in the first week of July, 1917, in Chicago. Ernest Horstman of Boston and Alfred Hamburger of Chicago were added to the executive committee, ex-President Herrington was appointed national organizer, at a salary of $2,000 per year, and A. H. Frank of Chicago appointed manager for the next convention.

PLAYERS ENGAGED AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

The Universal announces that it has engaged Harry M. C. Collins and J. H. Knowles Schenck, to play characters with the Paton Company at Universal City. A. E. Witting has been engaged to play characters in general stock, Priscilla Deane to play leads with Lyons-Moran Company and Thomas D. Moreno, comedian, has joined the Wallace Beery Company.

World Man Writes From Plattsburg

War Horse "Judso," Preparing for Eventualities, Describes How There's Something Doing Every Minute.

(Hanford C. Judson, of the Moving Picture World, is at the Military Training Camp at Plattsburg, N. Y. Mr. Judson is an advocate of Preparedness, and proves his sincerity by donning khaki and going "to it," man-fashion. The World man is not a "rookie"; he saw service in the Porto Rican campaign during the Spanish-American War. That the grilling he is undergoing up on the Canadian boruer has not dampened his enthusiasm or materially altered the color of the glasses through which he looks on his surroundings may be judged from the following letter, written at the close of his fourth day of training.)

Dear B:—Hep! One, two, three, four—One, two, three, four—One, two—Hold your heads up; don't march like volunteers—two, three, four. Pay attention now, and get this: Right by squads. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven. Company halt! One, two, one, two, three!

One of my mates here says if I ever tell anybody in New York that I came up here for a vacation I'll be put in Matteawan and will never get out again; will be put in for attempted suicide—with intent to kill. I asked him who he intended to kill—Mexicans? "No," he said; "they never did anything to me—and if they did I forgive them right now. I'm a Christian. And in case there is any doubt about it I came up here to get as far away from the border as I could."

Such is life! Four and a half hours of drill in the morning; four hours of it in the afternoon; a short spell of drill just before supper and a short spell of physical exercise just before breakfast—that is, at 5:45 A. M. There are only twenty-four hours in every day, thank Heaven! One, two, three, four; One, two, three, four; One, two, three four; One, two, three, four. Hep, hep, hep, hep; hep, hep, hep, hep.

International Offices Move

Hearst's Motion Picture Company Takes Two Floors in Building at Seventh Avenue and Forty-ninth Street.

THE International Film Service, Inc., has grown with such tremendous strides that the quarters in the Journal Building at Fifty-ninth street and Columbus Circle have become inadequate. In order to find room for all of the many departments, two entire floors, the eighth and sixteenth, of the new building at 729 Seventh avenue, corner of Forty-ninth street, have been engaged and elaborately fitted up.

For more than a week past the offices have been gradually transferred into the Seventh avenue building. Saturday was "get-away day," and what remained of the equipment in the Journal Building was picked up bodily and moved to the new location.

The International now has quarters that are unexcelled for convenience and comfort. The entire sixteenth floor is devoted to the use of the executive offices. On the eighth floor are located the business departments, the New York exchange and the projecting rooms.

The International has three great films in rehearsal, two of which are serials that promise to be more elaborate and startling than any heretofore produced. Details concerning them will be announced shortly.

"HAM AND BUD" GET VALUABLE PUBLICITY.

Lloyd V. Hamilton, the "Ham" of Kalem's "Ham and Bud" team, last week received a marked copy of the Genbunsha, of Tokio, Japan, and found that this conservative Japanese theatrical journal had condescended to treat of "the movies" to the extent of a three-page article on the "Ham" comedies. "Ham" hasn't summoned up courage enough to engage a translator for fear the article may not be as full of praise as it appears, but he translated the illustrations readily enough and found no harm in them.

REPORT ON BERT WILLIAMS BOOKINGS.

Biograph's special representative has completed a tour of the General Film exchanges and is en route to New York. Everywhere he reports exhibitors have been very glad to make pre-release bookings on Bert Williams, his Ziegfeld Follies reputation making him a big box office possibility. Special advertising has made it possible to have every representative newspaper in the country with their hundreds of correspondents print announcements of Bert Williams' entrance in pictures which has resulted in the July 24 release of "A Natural Born Gambler" in two reels being booked solid. Announcement of the second Bert Williams comedy and the advertising in connection therewith will be made as rapidly as it can be prepared, a Biograph official states. He adds that exhibitors are looking forward to these comedies to bolster up their summer business.

Two Vitagraph Comedies

Will Be Released During Week of July 24 on the General Film Program.

PRETTY locations are one of the pleasing features of "A Cheap Vacation," a Vitagraph single-part comedy. The theme is very appropriate for hot weather audiences as it deals with the everlasting question, "Where will we spend our vacation?" Two meek husbands decide to summer at a hotel in the mountains, but their wives soon disillusion them and drag them along to camp. After lugging the equipment necessary to camp life for a distance of ten miles, the men, almost exhausted, hold a meeting to decide on a plan of action. They hire a tramp, instruct him to make life miserable for their wives and then sit back and wait developments. The women soon tire of the discomforts which the tramp furnishes and beg to be taken home, and, of course, their hubbies object most strenuously.

"A Jealous Guy," a one-part Vitagraph, is a speedy comedy of the slapstick type in which Hughie Mack, Vitagraph's heavyweight comedian, who has the leading role, certainly earns his money. He is knocked about and bruised up unmercifully and succeeds in keeping his audience in constant and continuous merriment. Lawrence Semon, in directing the picture, made capital of every comical situation. Interiors are entirely acceptable (until Hughie and his supporting wreckers get busy, but after they have finished very little remains intact). The photography throughout is excellent. The supporting cast, which includes Jewell Hunt and Edward Dunn, conducts itself creditably. Semon and C. Graham Baker prepared the scenario.

Universal Issues "Paralysis" Picture

Takes Scenes Under Direction of Physicians and Health Inspectors to Assist in Fighting Epidemic.

MOTION picture views which will be shown at special matinees to mothers in the districts of New York where infantile paralysis is raging were presented by the Universal Film Company to the Board of Health last week for public exhibition throughout the city. The pictures were taken by an Animated Weekly topical news cameraman at the expense of the Universal at the Rockefeller Institute at 66th street and Avenue A, under the direction of one of the aids of Dr. Simon Flexner, director of the laboratory for medical research.

Other views were taken with the assistance of two inspectors from the Board of Health in the South Brooklyn district, in the Erie Basin district of Brooklyn, on the lower East Side, in Richmond Borough and in the Bronx. Included in the film are scenes showing the affected districts, stricken children, sanitary precautions necessary to prevent the further spread of the disease, how mothers may detect the first symptoms of the disease in their children, "close-ups" of the medical treatment given the children, scenes showing the exodus of children from the city to the country to escape the plague, taken at the railroad and ferry terminals, and the activity of the quarantine, Board of Health and hospital authorities.

The "leaders" or titles on the film are written in English, Italian and Jewish so that all may understand. A representative of the Board of Health spent an afternoon at the office of the Universal Film Co., 1600 Broadway, assembling the picture, writing in the titles and preparing the film for exhibition at New York's 800 picture theaters.

The expense of making the picture will total $4,700 and this expense the Universal has shouldered in an effort to stop the spread of the disease. The fifteen prints made from the original negative for simultaneous projection in the picture theaters of Greater New York were presented outright to the Board of Health. No admission will be charged to the theaters where the pictures are shown.

SIDNEY MEYER A WINNER.

No. 1 of Volume 9 of World's Work, the weekly house organ of the World Film Corporation, announces that Sidney Meyer, one of the company's Omaha salesmen, is the winner of a contest for May. The company made no advance statement of its intention to award a prize to the salesman securing the largest number of contracts for May, so the "win" came to Mr. Meyer as a surprise indeed.

"I don't mind saying that keeping in close touch with conditions through reading your columns was a great assistance to me in winning," says Mr. Meyer in a letter to this office. We extend to Mr. Meyer our congratulations, and assure him that there are thousands of others in the film business who are keeping in touch with conditions through the same agency that he finds so helpful.

"The Selfish Woman."

A Lasky Feature in Which Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid Carry Off the Honors.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE is little depth to this production; the dramatic scaffolding is weak, but the strong personality of Cleo Ridgely and her clever handling of the principal part make ample amends for these shortcomings.

The plot is not only thin, but quite conventional. The story is built around the change of heart of a woman, who marries a man for selfish consideration and who, after marriage, is willing to sacrifice her husband's honor for the sake of money. Ambitious to the point of being unscrupulous, she makes common cause with her husbands' enemies and even descends to crime to accomplish her ends. The husband, whose part is well taken by Wallace Reid, opposes candor and manly dignity to all her plotting. He refuses to overcome her machinations by employing means similar to her own, but in a very subtle manner appeals to her sense of honor and loyalty. It will easily be seen under the circumstances that the success of the play must bring upon a skilful portrayal of the woman's psychology. It is in this that Cleo Ridgely comes to the rescue of the play. Her capable rendition of the part, her art in depicting the gradual change from blind, unscrupulousness to a recognition of her evil ways and an awakening of genuine wifely qualities are deserving of unstinted praise.

Nothing need be said in a Lasky production of the skill shown in the selection of types, in the creation of atmosphere and in the choice of splendid settings. One does not hear much of Art Director Wilfred Buckland, but his clever and conscientious work is very apparent in this as well as in all the other Lasky productions.

"The Grip of Evil."

New Balboa-Pathe Serial, by Louis Tracy, Dips Deeply Into the Tragedies That Beset Humanity.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE first three chapters of "The Grip of Evil" give the observer an excellent idea of its strong sociological theme. Schopenhauer would have gloried in it and Ibsen would have been certain to applaud these opening instalments at least. It does not set out to deliberately prove that life is not worth living, but the hero, in his first adventures, runs only into the seamy side of things. Ingratitude, jealousy, treachery, murder and criminal carelessness—all these are met with in his search for the answer to the question: "Is humanity in the grip of evil?" We suspect that there may be a silver lining to the cloud later, but the opening reels are unsparing in their revelations of existing evils.

Roland Bottomley plays the part of John Burton, a factory hand in this country, who suddenly comes into possession of a title and a large inheritance in England. But he has already begun his humanitarian researches, having seen so much of the sadness of life. The first number, entitled "Fate," sets all these events before the observer. The hero himself has inherited his share of the weakness of humanity, his father having eloped with the maid thirty years previously and come to America. Jackie Saunders plays the feminine lead in each number, but her part is that of a different girl in each case. Only the hero retains his original identity.

"The Underworld" is the second chapter. In this John Burton catches a young porch-climber, known as Gentleman Joe, at work in his room. He feeds him and befriends him, trying to get him back upon the straight road. Gentleman Joe rewards him by the basest treachery. The action takes on a decidedly melodramatic turn in the second reel.

"The Upper Ten" is the third chapter. In this number the hero falls a victim to a society woman and her husband, who hear of his title and his fortune. They desire him for their daughter. The ball scenes are well staged. The tragic incidents occur in the second reel, where the old watchman and his wife kill themselves because of a failure of the stock in which they have invested all their savings. Then comes the injury of the girl by an approaching train, which is vividly pictured. Her lover, Ralph, deserts her after seeing that her facial injuries are permanent.

The serial thus far contains no humor and no romantic interest. In this respect it marks a strong departure from the prevailing type of serial and it will be interesting to see how the public will receive a continued narrative of this type.

"The Dream Girl."

Mae Murray Is Afforded Many Opportunities in Lasky Picture Made by Cecil B. DeMille from Jeanie MacPherson's Scenario.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

BECAUSE it is very well done, rather than because of any extraordinary quality in the story, "The Dream Girl" belongs among the good, if not the best of the Lasky pictures. If there were any doubts about the wisdom of starring Mae Murray after her performances in "To Have and to Hold" and "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," they are set at rest by her playing of a slum girl in this photoplay, from the pen of Jeanie MacPherson and produced by Cecil B. DeMille. That Miss Murray possesses a piquant charm is amply evidenced in her portrayal of the ill-used Meg, a pitiable waif, whose chosen place of refuge when her drunken father becomes unbearably brutal, is a barrel. In rags, or in costly gowns, the new Lasky star is a magnetic little creature, always spontaneously girlish. Her one mistake in this picture was in make-up—an all too obvious penciling of the eyebrows.

The perfection of Lasky photography, combined with ingenuity in achieving novel and striking effects, is revealed at the opening of "The Dream Girl" with the introduction of the characters in a manner suggesting their dominant traits. Very adroitly Director DeMille escapes a perfunctory exposition by making the first scenes as interesting as the initial paragraphs of a well-written novel. They contain the necessary information without presenting it in the bald manner, so unfortunately prevalent in less skillfully prepared pictures, and without conscious effort in memorizing names and relationships, the spectator comprehends the situation.

Of the plot prepared by Miss MacPherson little need be said, save that it is smoothly developed and plausible, according to the standard of romantic fiction. There are a few dramatic moments and some scenes of marked charm, usually due to clever bits of direction, or exceptionally expressive acting, such as that provided by Theodore Roberts in the role of Meg's dissipated father. In appearance and bearing Mr. Roberts gives a flawless impersonation of the uncouth product of the slums, besotted by drink. When Meg is about to be adopted by a millionaire, whose grandson has fallen in love with her, she explains that her father was a minister in Baltimore, and later, when the drunkard is confronted by this description of himself, Mr. Roberts meets the situation with a remarkable bit of subtle comedy acting.

Scenes pass from the slums to a girls' school, in which Meg is placed after her father is supposed to be dead, and then to the home of wealth where the girl is woed by her Sir Gallahad. All are well staged and effectivly acted by the players already mentioned, assisted by Charles West and Earle Foxe.

More Biograph Reissues.

"The Fatal Wedding," a Three-Reel Adaptation of Popular Melodrama—"A Sailor's Heart," One-Reel Comedy.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

JUDGED by a high, artistic standard, "The Fatal Wedding," produced by Lawrence Marston several years ago and now reissued by the Biograph Company on the General Film program, has a number of shortcomings, but so has the play from which it is taken. As a stage melodrama of the old school, making direct appeals to the emotions of simple, unsophisticated audiences, "The Fatal Wedding" enjoyed long popularity, and still, no doubt, is being successfully presented in many parts of the country. The picture is a very fair reflection of the play. Neither one would be suitable for first-class theaters in the larger cities, but there are many other audiences ready to respond to the elementary pathos and heart interest of a production of this stamp.

Charles Mailes, Millicent Evans, Irene Howley and Walter Miller carry the principal roles, and if it seems that once in a while they act with unnecessary fervor, the tendency may be pardoned in consideration of the ultra-melodramatic nature of the story. Most of the exteriors were photographed in upper New York, the studio sets were adequate and the climax, showing the spectacular interruption of a wedding about to take place in a fashionable church was presented on an elaborate scale. "The Fatal Wedding" does very well for people who are easily moved to sorrow.

"A Sailor's Heart," a one-reel picture made in Quebec by Wilfred Lucas, is called a satirical comedy. It is a pretty production of mild comedy value, if one is prepared to be amused by the proverbial ficklesness of the susceptible sailor who has a girl in every port. Many times he declares: "You are the only girl I ever loved," leaves broken-hearted and bobs up in the next town with the same statement on his lips. Presently he is caught and the girls he deserts catch other men, so all is well. Mr. Lucas, playing the sailor, is assisted by Blanche Sweet.

"The Faded Flower."

Six-Reel Photoplay Written and Directed by Ivan Abramson —Rose Coghlan, Marguerite Snow and Alma Hanlon in the Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SYMBOLISM and sentimentality are the chief ingredients of "The Faded Flower," the latest photoplay written and directed by Ivan Abramson. The title gives the cue to the mood in which the author has approached his theme, a withered rose symbolizing the fate of a woman whose life is blasted by the unreasoning jealousy of the man to whom she is married. Every character in the play is touched by an excess of sentiment, and the subtitles have more than a generous share.

The story is not without interest, but lacks any big moments. Lillian Hill, a young stenographer, marries her employer, a man old enough to be her father, in order that everything possible may be done to restore her mother's eyesight. The girl is in love with a young playwright, who is yet to score his first success. Wilbur Mason, Lillian's husband, is a worthy man, but when his wife learns that her mother's blindness cannot be cured, and that her sacrifice has been in vain, she proceeds to treat Mason with coldness, although he is as loving and thoughtful as ever. The next move in the drama shows the playwright enjoying large royalities from one of his works. Mason has a daughter a few years younger than his wife, and when the playwright finds that he has lost Lillian he wisely concludes to console himself with Lillian's step-daughter. Mason mistakes the object of the young man's visits and charges him with winning his wife from him. The symbolic rose makes its first appearance during this scene. Mason's jealousy is of the most violent nature, and Lillian leaves her husband's home, returns to her mother, sickens and dies, and the deeply repentant Mason, who has been seized by a paralytic stroke at the bedside of his dead wife, consents to the marriage of his daughter to the playwright.

"A Faded Flower" is not a faultless example of the photoplaywright's art. Like all of Ivan Abramson's screen dramas, it is intensely human in theme and character drawing; but none of the men and women of the story are capable of big things, and their actions are "sicklied o'er with the pale cast," of a cloying sentimentality that will have no traffic with reason or common sense. The jealousy of Mason does little credit to his gray matter, and nothing but a want of mental vision could blind him to the purity of Lillian, as drawn by the author and embodied by Marguerite Snow. The wife, on her side, loses considerable sympathy by allowing her disappointment at the outcome of her mother's blindness to vent itself upon the man who is doing his best to make her happy. The playwright, in spite of the good sense he displays in marrying Anne Mason, is not a very forceful person, and seems sadly lacking in resentment when accused of trying to break up Mason's home. The tales with which Mary J. Holmes was wont to entertain a past generation possessed many of the qualities to be found in "The Faded Flower"; commonplace persons, devoid of the heroic, but drawn with many skilful strokes being thrown upon the screen by Mr. Abramson, accompanied by a background of carefully staged settings, during the action of his play.

The acting honors of the performance go to Marguerite Snow. In a role that offered every opportunity for excessive emotionalism, she displays a reserve power and ease of method that is highly commendable. When her scenes ring true, her acting strikes the same clear note, when the author grows over-sentimental, she rises superior to him. The wide experience and sure art of Rose Coghlan are apparent in her fine impersonation of the blind mother. Arthur Donaldson is always effective as Wilbur Mason, and Alma Hanlon is attractive and capable as his daughter. Edward Mackay carries out the author's conception of the playwright.

"Caprice of the Mountains."

Fox Love Story with Backwoods Heroine Will Be Liked—Caprice and Harry Hillery in the Leads.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE first thing that one must say about "Caprice of the Mountains," the latest Fox feature, is that it is really emotional; it gets to where it sets out to go and carries the spectator along. This would not be true if it were not in a large measure artistic; but there is much in it that is easy to criticise. If art comes from knowing spectator-psychology, and if the artist wishes to appeal to a broad body of spectators, in intelligence somewhat below the critical, and knows just how far he can go with them, he can make a picture that will please mightily and still economize his mental effort. There is little doubt that the author and director (the latter is John Adolphi) have in this case willfully followed the cheap method of making a pleasing picture. Their picture was, we firmly believe, truly pleasing to the audience at the Academy of Music, where we saw the film, on July 11.

"Caprice of the Mountains"; we all know what kind of a story to expect from that title. Take any of them; they all have an element in common, with a backwoods heroine with straightforward simplicity and fervent affection, with smiles and tears carrying a somewhat elemental but clean love story and with a happy ending. In this case, June Caprice smiles and weeps through the scenes of the story, and is acceptable if not great. Harry Hillery is the manly hero. Several of the characters are better acted than the juvenile leads; but all do well enough. On the whole, the picture serves and we can recommend it to exhibitors as a film that will satisfy the young and simple-minded and everyone who comes in a reasonable spirit to be entertained. We cannot promise for the critic, but feel safe about the average spectator.

"Sally In Our Ally."

Famous Song Inspires Peerless-World Picture in Which Carlyle Blackwell and Murie Ostriche Are Starred.

WITH Muriel Ostriche appearing very winsome in the role of Sally McGill, and Carlyle Blackwell playing the Prince Charming character of Paul Taylor, "Sally in Our Alley," a five-part picture suggested by the popular song of a score of years ago, becomes a moderately entertaining photoplay. The story probably will be termed conventional; but at least it is wholesome and pleasantly romantic; moreover the production supplied by Travers Vale profits by a number of pretty scenes photographed on a large estate where Sally spends a brief summer vacation and meets the man of her dreams. Being inspired by a sentimental song it is natural that the photoplay should be exceedingly sentimental, also that it should depend largely upon simple pathos.

Sympathy is aroused for Sally by making her parents a most objectionable pair and giving her a miserable home on Pigtail Alley, where she may play in the street when she is not working in a factory along with other children under the legal age limit. A Lady Bountiful takes Sally and a number of her youthful companions to a beautiful estate in the country, and it is here that the poor girl, masquerading as a princess, meets a wealthy suitor for the hand of Mrs. Rockwell's snobbish niece. Of course, he is charmed by the fascinating and mysterious Sally, who refuses to explain who she is or where she came from, and when the girl is sent home in disgrace because she borrowod the finery in which to masquerade, Paul is suitably miserable.

The outcome of a story of this description is always a foregone conclusion. There is not much opportunity for uncertainty, save as to the nature of the happenings that will separate and then unite the predestined lovers. In this picture the incidents are varied, fairly interesting and not too wildly improbable for a frankly sentimental photoplay. Life in the tenements is depicted with sufficient realism and the director did not overlook the chances for appeal in presenting the unhappy condition of a number of factory children. Miss Ostriche and Mr. Blackwell are supported by Jean Shelby, Walter D. Greene, Pat Foy and Mrs. Foy.

IN this six-part offering, the Vitagraph company presents a drama of intense emotional appeal, written and produced by George D. Baker. The cast is large and evenly balanced. Edith Storey appears to advantage as Chonita Alvarado, a Cuban beauty. Harry Hollingsworth plays the role of Teddy Steele, the young fool from the States, who will not take advice and ventures too far with the native belle. Antonio Moreno plays the Cuban lover, Eulalie Jensen the faithful Donna Luz, L. Rogers Lytton the fiery Senor Alvarado, and Charles Kent the part of Van Allen, who narrates the story in a New York club.

There is a wealth of color and atmosphere in the production. The story has moments when it threatens to plunge into melodrama, but the natural development and forceful acting of the competent performers saves it from this fate. It maintains, as a result, a high level of intensity and moves on with attractive smoothness to the tragic climax in the last reel.

Briefly, the plot concerns a handsome young American who goes to Cuba with his uncle on business. He enters into a flirtation with Chonita and, despite warnings of her lover and his own friends, succeeds in bringing about her ruin. The girl, cast off by her proud sire, comes to New York as a cabaret dancer. She again meets the American and brings about his death by means of a deadly tarantula. The close is softened by a reconciliation with her father and her marriage to Pedro.

The production as a whole is one of exceptional strength.

Youthful Sentiment Characterizes First of Director Henry Otto's Yorke-Metro Productions.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IF PUBLISHERS of magazines deem it wise to give a light, sentimental tone to summer fiction there is no good reason why makers of photoplays should not be equally seasonable. No doubt "The River of Romance," written and directed by Henry Otto from a novel by E. J. Rath, will be good all the year round, but it is especially refreshing as a mid-July release. It is so delightfully suggestive of an ideal vacation in the Thousand Islands—the scene of the story—a vacation such as romantic youth dreams of experiencing, but never quite realizes because life is less kind than the creator of summer fiction. There is no problem here, nothing to puzzle one's brains about; rather a fresh, sweet story of an unspoiled pair of lovers, charmingly portrayed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison.

And it is not a hackneyed story at all—the meeting and romance of these two young people. William Kissam Kellogg, the heir to millions, does nothing more serious than break a valuable vase belonging to his uncle; yet, feeling in honor bound to pay for the ornament, he becomes the navigator of a one-cylinder motorboat for the conveyance of summer visitors to the islands. Rosalind chances to be one of his passengers and even with the seeming barrier of caste between them, the girl feels an interest in the handsome but inefficient owner of the decrepid craft. When the motor balks, she locates the trouble; they are forced to spend several hours together and by the time Rosalind reaches the island her friends are asleep. In attempting to enter the house she sets off the burglar alarm, and in preference to being discovered she braves the night and the river in a canoe. So the complications start and continue in merry succession, until the pseudo boatman carries off the heiress.

Scenes in which both the man and the maid claim credit for an heroic rescue contain whimsical comedy that blends very well with the vein of sentiment running through the picture. In regard to locations the production excels. Mr. Lockwood's boyish good looks make him ideal for the character of Kellogg, whereas Miss Allison possesses the grace and the freshness desirable in a society debutante.

THE portrayal on the screen of "Davy Crockett," a play made famous on the American stage more than a generation ago by Frank Mayo, results in a successful production from the pictorial viewpoint. "Davy Crockett," as Pallas Pictures released it on July 13, is a pretty picture. Dustin Farnum in the role of the frontiersman is a factor in himself; and he is surrounded by a good cast. The subject measurably interests, but with one or two exceptions it reaches no particular dramatic heights.

Mr. Farnum makes a striking figure in his early eighteenth century border garb. He shows to no better advantage than when mounted on a spirited horse. His physique and his art combine to make an effective characterization. Winifred Kingston in the role of Eleanor Vaughn, the sweetheart of Davy, is convincing in her girlish simplicity. Herbert Standing as Hector Royston, the representative of Vaughn and the guardian of Eleanor, gives a strong performance. Lydia Yeamans Titus, the old favorite, is a motherly Mrs. Crockett. Page Peters is shown as Neil Crampton, and his impersonation of the "heavy" role takes on a pathetic and an unusual interest by reason of his recent accidental death by drowning.

The picture is staged by William Taylor. Mr. Taylor has selected beautiful spots for his backgrounds, the full quality of which Cameraman Scott has brought out. There are views of woods, mountains and landscape. One of the interesting features, especially for present showing, is a regular snowstorm, the ground being covered knee depth.

"Davy Crockett" will make good entertainment.

"The Girl and the Tenor"

One-Reel Kalem Comedy Which Introduces Ivy Close, the English Actress, to the Screen in This Country.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is at least one rare feature about "The Girl and the Tenor," the one-reel comedy with which the Kalem company introduce Ivy Close to the American public: the lady's first entrance is made without the slightest "working up." All of "the pomp and circumstance" with which it is usually thought necessary to herald the coming of the star is dispensed with, and during the time Miss Close is before the camera she shows no desire to monopolize the center of the stage, but endeavors to work for the success of the picture to the best of her ability. Familiarity with her surroundings will give her an ease that she now lacks and her undoubted ability as an actress will then have full scope. Miss Close has much in her favor. She is a comely young woman, without any affectation of manner, and will be seen to the best advantage in parts that call for real feeling and a frank, wholesome personality. In "The Girl and the Tenor" she plays the daughter of an operatic manager who is trying to engage a celebrated tenor. The treatment of the theme is farcical, a condition which is exaggerated by the broad burlesque acting of Henry Murdock as Signor Bologna. Frank Howard Clark is the author of the scenario. He has supplied a number of comic situations, and the director, Robert Ellis, has extracted all the opportunities for laughs. William McKay, Mary Taylor-Ross, Arthur Albertson and C. D. Peruchi are members of the supporting company.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN is himself as a poor musician who fiddles his way into contributions made by bar loungers intent on listening to some rival performers in a German street band. He collects the money due both and gets away with it, only to stumble upon a romantic adventure with an abused little girl in a Gypsy camp, in reality the stolen child of wealthy parents. Charlie rescues her after a single-handed combat with the entire band of Gypsies and drives away with her in the van. Their vagabond joys are interrupted by a famous artist, who paints the girl so as to give prominence to the mark of a shamrock on one of her arms. The exposure of this picture in a gallery leads to the identification of the little girl and she is taken away from despairing Charlie, now madly in love with his companion in misery, but she refuses in the end to go without him.

The latter part of this story shows Chaplin in a new role, and he handles it well in spite of the necessity of being as funny as possible. He would make an interesting lead in almost any story if it were possible for him to divest himself of the little tricks which have made him famous. Those little tricks still go, and they pay, but it would be a novelty to see Chaplin free to do without them in some opportunity of a reverse, or much different, character.

"An International Marriage"

George Broadhurst's Drama Is Made Into Photoplay by the Oliver Morosco Company.

are, according to the description of a millionaire laundryman, of one fast color, and the color is yellow. Those who still cling to the idea of a United States monopoly of the manly virtues should be particularly appreciative of this production.

Under the direction of Frank Lloyd the Morosco Company assembled an able cast, headed by Rita Jolivet in the role of the daughter of a wealthy owner of a chain of laundries. Brent is the uncultured, honest, self-made father, ready to indulge his beautiful daughter though he may be ill at ease with her fashionable friends. Florence captivates Washington society with one toss of her pretty head. A duke and a count promptly fall under her spell while her life-long chum, an upright young congressman, looks on and bides his time.

In accordance with the regulations of the European court the duke does not marry a woman without a title, so Florence becomes the bride of the count, intending to get a divorce immediately. Meanwhile the congressman unearths a few unpleasant incidents in the lives of his foreign rivals, and at the point of a pistol demands the release of the girl that she may return to democratic America.

The most dramatic scenes are reserved for the concluding reel, in which Ogilesby forces the issue with the count and wins Florence's freedom. For comedy, the picture depends chiefly upon the embarrassment of the self-made American—cleverly portrayed by Marc Robbins—when confronted by European formality. Courtenay Foote returns to the Morosco Company in the character of the duke, a role for which he is eminently suited. Other convincing performances are given by Elliott Dexter and Page Peters. The production was tastefully, even lavishly mounted at times, whereas the photographic work of James Van Trees was of the best.

"Purity"

A Seven Reel Mutual-American Feature Exploiting Audrey Munson, an Artist's Model.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AUDREY MUNSON represents the perfection of womanly form. a distinguished model for painters and sculptors, a recognized type of physical symmetry, her poses are marvels of beauty without the faintest sign of suggestiveness. Her entire conduct in dress and out is that of a refined woman, and the role she is given enforces her native purity of mind. She is above all things artistic, entering into the spirit of her representations as one in love with what she has to accomplish with a winning sweetness that does much to disarm suspicion as to the motive for placing her grace and nobility of proportion on public exhibition in moving picture theaters. Whether or not her dignity and thoroughly professional attitude will convince local censors is quite another matter.

The chief added charm of the release lies in some splendid efforts at picture composition. Beauty is naturally the keynote of all the backgrounds, and this is as it should be, but the lovely views are not always appropriate. Where they are of the woodland they are in perfect harmony during the allegory, but such is not always the case when the grounds of some California estate are used. Where there is artificiality in an allegory of classic tendency, the backgrounds should be confined as far as possible to wild beauty, or to what resembles the classic in treatement. In general the beauty off scene is highly creditable to those concerned in its selection, a suitable frame for human loveliness. The story is a vehicle, but it is as lacking in true story interest, as are vehicles as a rule.

As to the motive for exposing the nude on the screen, it is obviously not that of pure artistry. It is rather that of appealing to morbid curiosity in the name of art, and it will react against itself and against the entire industry so far as family patronage of picture shows is concerned. If it was absolutely essential that Audrey Munson should appear in one of her poses to carry forward convincingly some strong story, it could be done consistently and without offense, but the very fact that the story is a mere vehicle, thrusting her into view at every conceivable opportunity, is in itself an argument against the general exhibition of such a play.

"The Secret of the Swamp"

Five-Reel Bluebird Comedy-Drama of Southern Life, With a Surprise Finish—Written and Produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"THE Secret of the Swamp" turns out to be a joke on the sheriff and everyone else in the community—except Deacon Todd. For nearly two reels the spectator shares with the good folk of the little Southern town the conviction that a murder has been committed and that Chet Wells, who had threatened the Deacon, is the guilty party. But when the murdered man drives up in his new Ford, the tragic aspect of affairs is at once dispelled. It all comes about because the Deacon thought it clever to take down the bars between his property and Major Burke's cornfield, and let his cows feed at his neighbor's expense. The Major takes a shot at the herd, in the moonlight, and imagines he has hit the Deacon and that the old skinflint has crawled over to the swamp and died. The Major has a pretty daughter. She is loved by a penniless young chap who comes into the neighborhood with his mother and gets the worst of a business deal with the Deacon. Chet's mother is taken ill and the boy feels that her death is hastened by overhearing Deacon Todd threaten to have them evicted for non-payment of rent. The combination of circumstances by which young Wells is charged with the murder of the Deacon gives no intimation that matters are to end in a laugh, and, as the supposed tragedy permits the hero to sacrifice himself, in good faith, in order to shield the Major, thereby winning the love and gratitude of the Major's daughter, the spectator is treated to all the shocks and thrills of genuine melodrama and, in place of a murder trial or a deathbed scene, is handed an unexpected comedy bit for the finish.

In arranging the foregoing story for the screen, the author has not made the mistake of taking it too seriously. He has aimed to construct an entertaining photoplay peopled with easily recognized characters, and has paid no heed to the "deeper significance" and moral stress with which it is thought necessary to weight down so many screen dramas. Even the rival lover isn't half a bad chap, and the villain of the piece turns out to be a regular old joker. The plot is unfolded without the use of cutbacks, and much of the action keeps pace with the leasurely movement of life below the Mason and Dixon line. Aside from the fact that the Southern mansion used in the picture is much too modern and spacious for a gentleman in Major Burke's circumstances, the locations have been well chosen.

Val Paul and Myrtle Gonzalez are a sympathetic pair of lovers, and George Hernandez, who gives an excellent performance of the Major, is a living example of what has long been suspected by people up North: that all Southern gentlemen are not Colonels and exact counterparts of F. Hopkinson Smith's celebrated Son of Dixie, Colonel Carter of Cartersville. Frank McQuarrie's Deacon Todd smacks as strongly of New England as does his name. Fred Church, Mary De Cella, Lule Warrenton and Jack Curtis are competently cast.

marked success ever since his debut as a picture actor in the early Biograph days. The story, written by Isola Forrester, might be condensed without sacrificing the plot, but because of the situations, humorous as well as dramatic, the clever characterizations of rough westerners, and the unfailing attractive locations, "The Quitter" justifies its length.

The situation with which the picture opens is familiar enough. The miners of Paradise Gulch feel that their paradise might be enlivened by the presence of a pretty woman, therefore Happy Jack Lewis is selected as a suitable husband, an advertisement is inserted in a newspaper and Glad Mason is drawn to the womanless Eden. Much is made of the preparations of the miners and the dismay of Happy Jack as the hour approaches for the arrival of his intended bride. Finally he boards a train for parts unknown and Glad is met at the station by a reception committee comprised of the elusive bridegroom's friends. As the girl more than fulfills the promise of her photograph the residents of Paradise Gulch become keen rivals for the place vacated by Happy Jack. Their efforts to win the favor of Glad give rise to a number of incidents that are humorous in an elementary way. How "The Quitter" returns, wins Glad and becomes the owner of a valuable claim is clearly set forth without disclosing the surprise reserved for the concluding reel.

Titles are well worded in the vein of western narrative, but some of them seem superfluous and might be eliminated. If the spectator has a taste for spirited fights it will be fully gratified, for fighting and drinking are the chief diversions of the men of Paradise Gulch. A clever touch in direction is the use made of a puppy that remains in Happy Jack's coat pocket throughout one of the most severe of his many encounters. Marguerite Skirvin appears very fresh and pleasing as Glad, whereas other characters are ably handled by Paul Everton, Edward Brennan and Charles Prince. Charles Horan directed.

"Honor Thy Name," Starring Frank Keenan; "Marriage of Molly-O," Featuring Mae Marsh; "His Wild Oats," Keystone Farce.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE fine old family spirit of Virginia, with its single code of morals, its high principles for womankind and its lax ones for men in all but the family relation, its struggle to maintain the outward semblance of honor at any cost—all these and much more pertaining to F. F. V. methods of surrounding the home with dignity and sweetness, in spite of the evil men do, are set forth in "Honor Thy Name," by Frank Keenan and a capable support. Prominent in that support, a star in herself, is Louise Glaum as the daring and skilful adventuress who wins the son and marries him while he is at college in New York in spite of his worldly father's clever expose of her character. Miss Glaum's skill and personal charm are so great that she wins sympathy for the character she impersonates while holding close to a consistent representation. Realizing that she is on the wrong side, that she stands very little chance of entering the old Virginia family as one of its members, she makes a daring attempt, one of extreme audacity under the circumstances.

Herein lies the continuity of interest—the foolish young son's wife is liable to do anything. The keen-visioned and worldly father, "Buck" Castleton in his early days, becomes aware that the family honor is really in danger. He tries desperate measures to rid his son of such an undesirable wife until, while out driving with her in a one-horse shay he resolves to go the limit. He whips his horse into a runaway and sends him over a cliff, destroying the family incubus and himself at the same time. The story is handled with exquisite taste.

"Marriage of Molly-O."

"Marriage of Molly-O" is a story of Irish life in Ireland, with much hard work in providing atmosphere, hard work with exterior flaws like the presence of gum trees, common enough in California, but unknown in Erin. An old Irishman makes a verbal will on his deathbed, giving his cow to Molly-O and the pig to his dear wife, intelligently impersonated by Kate Bruce. Molly-O is impersonated by Mae Marsh, and she is never anything else than Mae Marsh, in spite of poverty costumes. Of course there is a Prince Charming, Sir Larry O'Dea, playing car driver, and the usual villain, the landlord's son, who attempts a mock marriage when times are so hard that the rent can't be paid. He promises a silk dress for the mother, a bell for the cow and a ribbon for the pig as the price of Molly-O's hand. He leads her to an inn, but is foiled in his purpose by Larry O'Dea when all seems lost. Larry then provides all that the villain promised, and the poor girl marries her Prince Charming.

A large amount of space is given to a fairy story told by Larry, having no intrinsic interest and not impressively appropriate. This cut in the straight story has little other excuse than the absence of materials for a five-reel feature, and it operates to divert whatever interest was aroused in the opening scenes.

"His Wild Oats."

"His Wild Oats" is one of the dullest Keystones ever shown on the screen. It lacks the stirring melodrama and athletic feats which have often awakened admiration for the Sennet plays, and it has very little compensation of true humor. It is the story of a lady's tailor who attempted to elope with another man's wife and was diverted from his purpose in a picture show.

IT IS difficult to classify this series of comics being released by the L-Ko company. They are something different from the ordinary slapstick performance, and yet belong to the same general type of fun. The events which take place in this three-reel number makes one think of an animated newspaper cartoon series. Certainly Alice Howell, who has already done good work in previous numbers, gets a firm hold on the risibles in this production and maintains it throughout the entire three reels.

She first appears as a young lady of the slums, who is overly popular with the police. She dashes up an alley, followed by three or four cops, and breaks into the stage door of the David Tobasco stock company's theater. Here events follow thick and fast. Having eluded the cops she proceeds to make friends with the manager and saves him from a clean-up on the part of the leading man and leading lady, about to depart with all the money in the place.

Alice gets a bad attack of stage fever and induces the manager to let her play leads. The burlesque scenes are extremely funny. She hangs from the chandelier, milks a fake cow, is tied down before an approaching train and goes through numerous other comic stunts. The snow scene, in which the paper snow gets on fire, is laughable. The whole number winds up with a rapid-fire chase.

chap coolly announces that he is the owner of a sea-going steam yacht and, unknowingly, lends his craft to further a plot by which a shipment of firearms are landed in the South American Republic of Santa Bana, to assist in overthrowing the Government, the author must be credited with introducing something new in situations. John Calkins, the father of the heroine, is a manufacturer of firearms, and is not averse to a little filibustering, provided it promises a large reward. His son is an officer in the United States Navy, and heads a landing party from his ship when the revolutionists threaten the lives of the Americans in Santa Bana. Lieutenant Calkins' father and sister have been made prisoners by the leader of the Insurgents, and the officer is shot down by a bullet from one of the elder Calkins' illegally imported weapons.

The "rough neck" takes his proper place in all the situations, a squad of real sailors from one of Uncle Sam's warships make short work of the revolution, and the melodrama proceeds to the finish of the third reel after unwinding an unusual amount of romantic adventure and winding up with the lovers embracing in the center of a crowd of admiring Jackies and the American flag streaming proudly above their heads. James Douglass, the author of the scenario, has not lacked for material, and has shown no bias in its selection. His craftsmanship is occasionally deficient in skill; but want of vigorous movement is not one of his faults. Melvin Mayo directed the picture. Portions of his work are excellent; several of the incidents demand an entirely different verdict.

The acting is competent, and is intrusted to George Routh, B. W. Hopkins, Evelyn Page, Wedgewood Howell, C. K. Van Auker and Adelaide Bronti.

Gail Kane Heads a Strong Cast in a Well-Made Brady Subject with a Touch of the Sea.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

PARAGON'S release through the World Film on July 24, "Paying the Price," is worth while. It is a subject containing good situations and there are excellent players to interpret the roles, principal and subordinate. Gail Kane is at the top of the list, and with her are George Relph, Gladden James, George Majeroni and June Elvidge. The interest is well divided between all of these; in fact, the story has been told as a story, without any effort to build it around one to the exclusion of others.

Miss Kane is charming in the lighter passages—she has marked magnetic quality—but it is in the sterner moments when she is at her best. Her role is that of the woman who picks from two men the wrong one for a husband—and very soon discovers her error. The dramatic interest is intensified by the decision of the wife after a battle with herself that she will adhere to the right. Mr. Relph is the naval officer who sees the woman he loves married to the army man to whom he had introduced her. Mr. James is the successful suitor who through his habits of spending gets into difficulties and attempts to recoup by selling government secrets. Mr. Majeroni is the foreign agent who seeks to obtain the formula of the explosive invented by the navy man.

Director Frank Crane received from the Navy Department valuable assistance in the staging of his subject. He had at his disposal a torpedo boat, of which we have many intimate views. One of the more interesting of these is the loading, aiming and launching of a torpedo. There is a thrill in the denouement when in testing the new explosive the torpedo tube is trained on the hulk on which are hiding the army officer and the foreign agent, that they may the better observe the result of the test.

"Paying the Price" is well made. It is possible in these days of preparedness that many who witness the subject will note that the rank of lieutenant ascribed in the sub-titles to the army officer will not square with the captain's insignia on his uniforms. That, however, is not the main question, which is that the subject is well above the average.

War to the Front in Mutual Weekly No. 81.

The spirit of the day is reflected in Mutual Weekly No. 81, which has just reached the screen. Because of its foreign connections, since the Mutual Weekly is manufactured by the Gaumont company, the first views of the important European events may be depended upon to reach the screen promptly. This week "from somewhere in France" come pictures of big cannon at the front. Paris itself sends pictures of Russian troops passing through the metropolis and German shells on view at the Invalides. "Business as usual" has also become the Parisian's motto, for following scenes of war's grim trade are dainty fashions for women from the exclusive house of Jeanne Blanchot.

The American annex of the world war is pictured in the submarine which appeared at Newport News on its way to Baltimore with a commercial cargo. Our own difficulty on the Mexican border comes in for its due share of pictorial publicity. The governor of Washington is seen reviewing the state troops mobilized for war. At Provincetown, Mass., Uncle Sam's newest super-submarine has its first trial caught by the camera.

Summer is the great American season for sports. This is carefully taken into account by the editor of the Mutual Weekly. There are pictures of three record-breakers, the national woman swimmer at San Francisco, the winner of the world's champion motorcycle race at Dodge City, Kan., and the winner of the motor boat regatta at St. Paul, Minn. At San Francisco the Pacific League pennant is awarded to the "Seals"—the first for that city in seven years.

Tacoma, Wash., contributes a most unusual picture—the head-on collision of two locomotives. It was a premeditated affair, staged for the benefit of holiday-makers.

"The Lost Paradise" (Pathe).

Although she does not love him, Janet Gordon marries Marc Lander, a man much older than herself, to save her father from ruin. Tom Moore, the man with whom she is in love, leaves town to accept a position in another city. Some time later Janet and Lander quarrel because of Janet's dislike of her husband's friends. She goes to the town where Tom is working, and there is granted a divorce. Later she and Tom, the latter having secured a good position, are married. After several years of bliss, Lander comes to her and announces that the divorce she secured in another state does not hold in the one in which she is living. Tom weakened by over-work, dies when he learns of this. His sister then appears on the scene and claims the property. Tom having died without a will, and not having been legally married to Janet, the latter takes her two children and leaves the house.

Two New Dustin Farnum Subjects.

The New York office of Pallas Pictures has just received the information that "The Parson of Panamint," a new Dustin Farnum subject, has been completed and that the popular star has commenced work on his latest vehicle, "A Son of Erin."

General Film Company

THE SQUAW'S LOVE (Biograph), July 10.—A single-reel Indian subject reissued by Biograph. The story is dramatic and very well acted by Mabel Normand, Alfred Paget and Claire McDowell. Scenes photographed on a river flowing through a wilderness are particularly worth while.

OTTO, THE SLEUTH (Lubin), July 10.—It is doubtful if Sherlock Holmes would approve of some of Otto's deductions while on the trail of a crime, but, as played by D. L. Don, the German sleuth is good for a number of hearty laughs. For a burlesque comedian, Mr. Don is remarkably easy and restrained in his method. The plot of this one-reel farce has to do with the theft of a canary.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 55, 1916 (Selig), July 10.—Negro troopers surrendered by Mexico, arrive at El Paso; King George inspects troops, London, Eng.; Gen. Bell and staff meet Gen. Gonzales on International Bridge, El Paso; militiamen encamp in New York City streets; life saving drill on Norwegian steamer, Bergen, Norway; seals on Pigeon Island, Cal.; El Paso, Len Spillsbury, the Mormon scout; Chicago stock yards clearing house for army mules; Chas. E. Hughes and Wm. H. Taft confer at Bridgehamton, L. I.

WRONG BEDS (Vitagraph), July 10.—A country hotel is the scene of this one-reel comedy, a commercial traveller, a female temperance orator and a soubrette being concerned in a general mix-up of rooms. The complications are quite humorous, and Wm. Dangman is amusing as a lively bellhop. Lucille Crane, Florence Natol, Geo. O'Donnell and Harry Mayo are well cast. The picture was written by James A. Stiles and produced by Frank Currier.

THE BAGGAGE SMASHERS (Kalem), July 11.—Ham and Bud are the gentlemen who hustle the trunks in this one-reel farce. They hire out to assist a lady station agent and run against a country sleuth and several bad men. The reel takes rank among the better of the Ham comedies. Ellen Godsay plays the lady station agent.

THE QUACK QUAKERS (Kalem), July 12.—Not since the days of Kate Castleton has any one looked so fetching in a quaker costume as Ethel Teare, in this one-reel comedy. The plot is full of deft turns and is the work of Samuel J. Taylor. H. L. Davenport, Gus Leonard, Victor Rottman and G. Taylor take part in the proceedings.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 55, 1916 (Selig), July 13.—Race meeting in Vienna, Austria; on the eastern front, German reinforcements are rushed to aid Austrians; safe and sane Fourth, New York City; cowboys meet, Las Vegas, N. M.; German soldiers in Castle Belvedere Park, Warsaw, Russia; Ralph De Palma wins 150-mile race at Minneapolis; Indians of the Islette tribe, Las Vergas; on the western front, Germans evacuating trenches; motor boat regatta at St. Paul; Governor McDonald and Miss Hazel Gerard, Queen of the Cowgirls, Las Vergas, N. M.

SPAGHETTI (Vim), July 13.—It is, perhaps, too much to say that spaghetti plays the leading part in this one-reel comedy, but it is the star "prop." Plump and Runt, assisted by the entire cast consume, juggle and bombard each other with it, and, finally, bury one of their number under gallons of "Dagoes Delight." Persons who relish this brand of humor will have a feast.

THE WISHING RING (Kalem), July 14.—The village blacksmith makes Sis a present of a horseshoe ring and she manages to wish a choice variety of trouble upon herself and her friends. Frank Howard Clark is responsible for the scenario, which is fairly well stocked with fresh matter.. Rose Melville and her support make the reel a cheery one.

THE BROKEN BRAKE (No. 88 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), July 15.—A review of this picture was printed in the issue of July 22, page 652. Helen Gibson does a job of expert switching during the action and boards a swiftly moving train, after overtaking it while mounted on a flying broncho.

HANG ON COWBOY (Lubin), July 15.—Romaine Fielding wrote, directed and played the principal part in this one-reel drama. And he is certainly a devil of a fellow all through it! He rescues a maiden in distress, turns a town upside down, and keeps on the broad grin all the time. As a hero of fiction, he is immense. June Daye, Jack Lawton, Eleanor Mason and Arthur Minium have a share in the general joy.

THE SQUAW'S LOVE (Biograph), July 10.—A reissue of one of the one-reel successes in which Mabel Normand, Alfred Paget and Claire McDowell had prominent parts. The vigorous touch of D. W. Griffiths gives life to the entire reel.

THE FABLE OF THE SMALL TOWN FAVORITE WHO WAS RUINED BY TOO MUCH COMPETITION (Essanay), July 12.—Rather a long title for a one-reel comedy, but George Ade has packed it with so much telling humor, and the moral, "Anybody can win unless there happens to be a second entry," is brought out with so much skill, that the picture justifies its lengthy name. The fable is another proof that an American girl can always land, no matter from where she starts.

THE GREAT SAFE TANGLE (Vim), July 14.—Pokes and Jabbs lead the fun-makers in this one-reel comedy. The material is original and gives the stars a chance to create a lot of laughs. Harry Naughton, Ethel Burton, Frank Hanson and Robin Williamson assist Burns and Stull.

LEGAL ADVICE (Selig), July 15.—This is a burlesque comedy, written and produced by Tom Mix. It gives a comic view of the havoc created among a crowd of cowboys by the arrival of a lady lawyer. They are all ready and willing to break any or all the laws, in order to hire the new attorney. Tom Mix, Pat Chrisman, Geo. Pankey, Joe Ryan and Victoria Forde romp and frolic through the reel.

General Film Company Specials

POWER (Essanay), July 8.—This three-reel photoplay by Charles Mortimer Peck, is well named. It illustrates the power of nature and also the power of a political boss. The plot is vital, well handled and contains an interesting love motive. Nell Craig, Sydney Ainsworth, Carroll C. James and Ullrich Haupt are members of an efficient cast.

THE PRIVATE OFFICER (Essanay), July 11.—A two-reel reissue of one of the most successful dramas produced by the Essanay company, with Francis X. Busbman in a dual role. It is a story of army life and has a strong plot. Beverly Bayne and Thomas Commerford are Bushman's leading support.

THE HALF WIT (Lubin), July 11.—A half-witted young man who gets mixed up with a gang of crooks and the Mafia and is finally restored to reason, is the leading character in this two-reel drama, written by Arthur Peterman. There is variety of action in this picture and a love interest that has a happy ending. L. C. Shumway plays the half wit, and Helen Eddy his sweetheart. George Routh, Melvin Mayo, Robert Gray, Dorothy Barrett, Jay Morley and Adelaide Bronti have the remaining characters.

MEN AND WOMEN (Biograph), July 12.—Reviewed in the issue of June 24th, this three-part drama, reissue by Biograph, is classed as a safe attraction, because of an adequate story presented by a distinguished cast, including Blanche Sweet, Marshall Neilan and Lionel Barrymore.

EXPIATION (Lubin), July 13.—This three-reel photoplay was written by Frances Greene. It is a highly romantic story, the opening scenes taking place in Turkey during the Crimean War. There is strong interest throughout. Octavia Handworth, E. K. Lincoln, Clarence Jay Elmer, Herbert Fortier, Wm. H. Turner and Margaret Adair complete an excellent cast.

A MILK WHITE FLAG (Selig), July 10.—The positive genius which the late Charles Hoyt possessed for extracting merriment from a grave subject was shown in his satire of the militia, "A Milk White Flag." The three-reel screen version of this clever comedy retains much of the humor of the original, and visualizes the military funeral which is the big situation of the plot. Otis Harlan, so long identified with the Hoyt productions, is very amusing in the leading part, and is supported by Charlotte Minneaux, Grace Darmond, Leslie King and James Bradbury. T. N. Heffron directed the picture.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE SILENT BATTLE (Bluebird), July 24.—J. Warren Kerrigan and Lois Wilson play the leading roles in a satisfactory adaptation of a novel by George Gibbs, dealing with the struggle of a man who inherits a taste for drink. The picture is well acted and staged. A review may be found on another page of this issue.

George Kleine.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (Nos. 8 and 9) (July 10-17).—These two chapters, like the previous ones, are interesting, though the action is rather slow. An important factor is introduced which is bound to awaken renewed interest in future developments. The complications in the treatment and development of the plot still keep one guessing as the final outcome. The use of double exposure at the close of chapter nine is almost uncanny. This subject was reviewed in last week's issue.

International Film Service Inc.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL No. 55, 1916, July 11.—Zeppelin airship wrecked by British anti-aircraft guns at Salonika, Greece; sea-lions at Pigeon Point, Cal.; patrol of U. S. Regulars at Brownsville, Tex.; review of Oregon State Militia at Portland, Ore., City Hospital Ship, Boston, Mass.; Fashion Section; parade of striking garment makers, New York City; doctors from Washington fight infantile paralysis; bodies of Captain Boyd and his negro troopers are brought to El Paso; German submarine liner Deutschland arrives at Baltimore, Md.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 56, 1916, July 14.—Natives of French Indo-China in the trenches outside of Salonica; U. S. submarine M-1, under way; regatta at St. Paul, Minn.; Charles F. Hughes at the country home of Harry Payne Whitney, Roslyn, L. I.; the 14th Infantry, N. Y. N. G., arrive at Brownsville, Tex.; U. S. Regulars leave Fort Rosencrans, San Diego, Cal., for the Mexican border; teaching girls to swim, New York City; Ralph De Palma wins 150-mile auto race, Minneapolis, Minn.; arrival of U. S. Transport Buffalo at San Diego, Cal., with refugees from Mexico; fashion section; United States honor Captain Boyd at Washington, D. C.; health authorities endeavoring to stop the ravages of infantile paralysis at New York; explosion of refrigerating plant, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE RIVER OF ROMANCE (Yorke), July 17.—A light, very pretty story made in the Thousand Islands with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the leading roles. It is a summer romance brightly acted in charming locations and may be relied upon as pleasing entertainment, demanding little concentration or thought. Henry Otto directed.

Mutual Film Corporation

THE HERO OF E. Z. RANCH (Cub), July 14.—George Ovey appears in this as the hero of a ranch episode. The plot is familiar, but handled in a lively, enjoyable way. He wins the hand of the heiress, who has exchanged places with her maid.

RUMMY ACT OF OMAR K. M. (Beauty), July 16.—Orral Humphrey is featured as the warm-blooded Persian philosopher in this burlesque number. His flirtations with a woodland nymph are interrupted at intervals by his angry sponse. This is an original effort and gets a broad smile occasionally from the observer, though it never becomes uproariously funny.

REEL LIFE, NO. 11 (Gaumont), July 16.—This is a splendidly diversified number. Marble quarrying in Italy makes the opening feature. Glimpses are shown of the way in which auto thieves spirit away machines. Physical training by means of sports in France follows, and then some animal studies from the Bronx zoo.

A DEEP SEA LIAR (Vogue), July 16.—A comic number, by Robert A. Dillon, featuring Ben Turpin, Arthur Moon and Rena Rogers. The scenes are short and jerky, giving much of the action a meaningless character. The plot, which might have shown up to better advantage, is lost in the abrupt change of scenes.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

LOVE'S BITTER STRENGTH (American), July 10.—A two-reel number, by Anthony W. Coldeway, featuring Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne. The young wife loses her memory after an accident and is separated from her husband. Jim, the hero, falls in love with her, but later events cause the husband to turn up and Jim makes a sacrifice of her love. An old theme handled entertainingly.

THE VAGABOND (Lone Star), July 10.—Charlie Chaplin as himself in one vivacious reel and as heroic lover in another. Chaplin is amusing in one and gives evidence in the other that he is capable of a higher grade of performance.

NUGGET JIM'S PARTNER (Mustang), July 14.—Frank Borzage is author, producer and leading player in this entertaining two-reel subject. Dick La Reno and Anna Little also play important parts. The story tells of a young Eastern sport who is cast off by his father and lands in Arizona, via a box car. He saves the girl from an unhappy fate and regenerates her father. The plot has an ordinary sound, but the picture is really above the ordinary. Much skill has been employed in presentation, particularly in avoiding trite and obvious business. A good Western subject.

THE FOOL'S GAME (Centaur), July 15.—A two-reel number, featuring Crane Wilbur, Mae Gaston and John Oaker. The plot concerns a wealthy man who finds his wife with another man, known as "The Parasite." He handcuffs them together and imprisons them in his mountain cabin until they learn to hate each other. Later they escape to the desert, still handcuffed. At the close the wife shoots the parasite in order to save her husband. This is melodramatic in tone, but handled with strength. The plot has unpleasant features, but holds the interest firmly.

SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, NO. 9 (American), July 17.—This installment opens with the scenes immediately following the earthquake, from which all emerge alive. Cleo is kidnapped by Morton and taken in an aeroplane. She drops from this in a parachute and lands near Pattens' cabin. Morton imprisons her there. Hope gets on the trail and falls from the high tramway in attempting to reach the cabin. This number contains many thrills of a legitimate sort and winds up with Cleo's situation a doubtful one.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE WILD AND WOOLY WEST (Bray), July 16.—In this cartoon burlesque on western melodramas, the method of constructing a photoplay story is followed even to the introduction of the characters—the heroine, the hero and the villain. A. D. Reed made the drawings, which are fairly amusing. The reel closes with a first rate Ditmars' animal picture, called "Wild Babies."

BEAUTIFUL BAVARIA (Burton Holmes), July 16.—Views photographed along the river Ache occupy a prominent place in this interesting travel subject. As usual, Mr. Holmes was fortunate in his choice of locations and in giving the picture a human appeal by introducing peasant types.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), July 16.—Ice cutting and the making of artificial ice are fully illustrated in this issue of Pictographs, which includes two other subjects of a scientific nature—the use of chemicals in war and the running of an electric railroad over the Rockies. The Better Babies department deals with the development of a constructive imagination in children.

THE DREAM GIRL (Lasky), July 17.—The story of a waif of the slums, who, after many trying experiences, is given shelter by a wealthy man whose grandson has fallen in love with her. Mae Murray appears to decided advantage as the star of the picture and Theodore Roberts gives one of his flawless characterizations. A review of this finely produced photoplay may be found elsewhere in this issue.

DOWN THE DANUBE TO VIENNA (Burton Holmes), July 23.—The beauties of the Danube are finely pictured in this Burton Holmes release, which also gives the spectator a very fair idea of the appearance of Vienna. The choice of scenes was excellent and they were well photographed.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), July 23.—In popular interest the chief feature of this issue of Pictographs will be the pictures of the catching and landing of a man-eating shark on the Jersey shore. The editor might have thought a long while without finding more timely material. Lessons in horsemanship, the Better Babies department and duck raising on a large scale are other numbers in this reel.

AN INTERNATIONAL MARRIAGE (Morosco), July 24.—A five-part drama based on George Broadhurst's play of the same name. Rita Jolivet carries the leading role, that of an American heiress, who becomes unpleasantly involved with titled foreigners. The picture was carefully produced by Frank Lloyd and is entertaining. A review may be found on another page.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 54, 1916 (Pathe), July 5.—Good views of Hughes and Taft, state military organizations leaving for the Mexican front, and a general assortment of entertaining scenes are included in this.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 55, 1916 (Pathe), July 8.—The Fourth at Oyster Bay, American refugees returning from Mexico, English king and queen at Kitchener memorial, motor boat racing on the Mississippi, and other events of interest are pictured in this number.

UNFRIENDLY FRUIT (Pathe), July 17.—A light-running comic, featuring Heinie and Louie in various mixups. The runaway auto tire makes a good feature. This is quite amusing.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

A TRIAL OF SOULS (Arrow), July 10.—No. 10 of "Who's Guilty?" series. Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore appear as a young couple who marry after an elopement. The parents object and seek to annul the marriage. This brings out some sad features as to the girl's unhappy origin and eventually leads to her suicide by drowning. The number is convincingly pictured and contains a pathetic touch.

BRANDING THE INNOCENT (Arrow), July 17.—No. 11 of "Who's Guilty?" This features Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore in one of the strongest of the series. It demonstrates the bad results that follow because divorces granted in one state are not good in certain others. The young wife in this case becomes guilty of bigamy without knowing it and her children by the second husband are branded as illegitimate. The number has an excellent motive and is well presented throughout.

THE TRIUMPH OF THE LAUGHING MASK (Feature), July 10.—No. 20, the final episode of "The Iron Claw." This brings the absorbing serial to a successful close and reveals the identity of the Laughing Mask in a way that will satisfy the average observer. Legar meets his end, after becoming inoculated with the germ of the colon bacilli, which causes him to age greatly in a few moments. The series has held the interest and the mystery has been well protected. All of the principals, Pearl White, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis, have added to their laurels.

FATE (Balboa), July 17.—This is the first two-reel chapter of a new serial, "The Grip of Evil," by Louis Tracy. The young hero, John Burton, after meeting with hard luck in a factory strike, suddenly finds himself the heir to a fortune and a title in England. His heart has been touched by the sadness of life and he seeks an answer to the question, "Is humanity in the grip of evil?" The series promises to have a strong sociological trend and less of the romantic than the average serial. Roland Bottomley and Jackie Saunders play the leading roles.

THE UNDERWORLD (Balboa), July 24.—Chapter 2 of "The Grip of Evil." Roland Bottomley continues the part of John Burton, sudden heir to a fortune and a title. Jackie Saunders appears as Gertrude Brooks, a dancing teacher. Burton aids a young thief, known as "Gentleman Joe," only to have him turn traitor in the end. Once more the question arises in his mind, "Is humanity in the grip of evil?" No effort is being made in this series to gloss over the tragic incidents of life. Much of the action is of a decidedly melodramatic turn.

Triangle Film Corporation.

STRANDED (Triangle-Fine Arts), July 23.—A very humanizing story of tbe plight of an old actor, admirably interpreted by De Wolf Hopper.

THE HALF BREED (Triangle-Fine Arts), July 30.—A strong adaptation from one of Bret Harte's stories, with Douglas Fairbanks in one of the best roles he has ever created. .

THE PAYMENT (Triangle-Ince), July 30.—A powerful story of an ambitious girl's realization of what it costs to succeed in an artistic career. Bessie Barriscale at her best.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

SHE WAS SOME VAMPIRE (Joker), July 22.—A burlesque number, by Allen Curtis, featuring Gale Henry as a lady vampire. The scenes are laid on a beach and are laughable in places. The eccentric characterizations are very funny.

ART FOR ART'S SAKE (Nestor), July 24.—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Roberta Wilson appear in tbis comedy number, by Ben Cohn. Tbe girl crook lures the two young men into a scbeme for obtaining some valuable paintings without paying for them. All wind up under arrest. Slight in plot, but breezy and amusing. Some of the photography is a little dim in places.

CROSS PURPOSES (Victor), July 25.—A story of diplomatic intrigue, by Bess Meredyth, featuring Jack Connelly and Jessie Arnold. Tbe girl spy agrees to obtain certain papers, but her love leads her to save her victim from dishonor because she loves him. The situations on the whole are familiar, but contain a new twist of an entertaining sort.

JUST A FEW LITTLE THINGS (Victor), July 26.—A comedy number, by Wallace Beery, featuring Ruby Cox, Victor Potel and the author. Two parties to a romance quarrel. The girl then marries a man with six children and the man a widow with the same number. This develops considerable humor.

WON BY VALOR (Imp), July 27.—This number, by Catherine Carr, features Howard Crampton, Sidney Bracy and Sydell Dowling. The story tells of a handsome young groom who falls in love with the heroine. He wins her love and turns out to be a lord. This has a rather pleasing romantic touch and is nicely presented.

A GREAT LOVE (Big U), July 28.—This number, by Olga Printzlau, features Hayward Mack, Mina Cunard, Norbert A. Myles and Vola Smith. The plot is the conventional one of a young artist falling in love with a girl of the woods. He comes to his senses eventually and there is a happy ending. There is an idyllic charm about the picturesque scenery that makes the story attractive in spite of its familiarity.

I'VE GOT YER NUMBER (Joker), July 29.—A comedy of the knockabout type, by A. E. Bishop, featuring Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and others. The husband goes to a directors' meeting, drinks too much, and has a terrible dream. The automobile feature is a good one. This gets frequent laughs from the observer.

THE MASK OF FORTUNE (Laemmle), July 29.—An unusual subject, by Calder Johnstone, in which the daughter of a broker discovers that she has a gift for fortelling events. She becomes a professional seeress and her powers are tested by both her father and the man she loves. Marjorie Ellison, Malcolm Blevins and Jack Connelly appear. The settings are attractive and the plot unique.

Universal Film Mfg.Company Specials

BRANSCOMB'S PAL (Rex), July 23.—A two-reel story, by Banister Merwin, presented by a company of capable English actors. An intelligent dog plays a leading part and wins the sympathy of the observer. The plot has to do with a girl's weak brother and the personal sacrifices of her lover to save the youth's reputation at the expense of his own. The dog brings about an understanding at a crucial moment. This makes an entertaining release.

TEMPTATION AND THE MAN (Red Feather), July 24.—This five-reel subject, written by Catherine Carr and produced by Robert F. Hill, features Hobart Henley, Sydell Dowling, Sidney Bracy, Clara Beyers and Joseph Granby. It is the story of a reformed convict, a wealthy girl who organizes and finances a mission, and a gambler and his paramour. A weak husband also complicates matters. The story has some conventional qualities, but is not so obvious in plot as it threatens to be at the beginning. The later complications, while not always convincing, are new and different. The chief strength of the opening scenes is found in the mission quarters. This gets close to real life and contains considerable humor. The number as a whole is well up to the average.

PEG O' THE RING, NO. 13 (Universal Special Feature), July 24.—No big incidents occur in tbis installment. The action consists chiefly of hand-to-hand fighting and a repetition of much that has gone before. Peg is again spirited away by the Hindu and his pals, who disguise themselves as clowns for that purpose. The second reel closes with Frank Lund in pursuit. This is only fairly strong.

PRISCILLA'S PRISONER (Big U), July 27.—A two-reel number featuring Cleo Madison, Chas. Gunn, Ray Hanford and others. This has a rather weak plot. Two city youths plan to rob a country girl of her savings. One drops out of the scheme and tries to stop the other. The first is arrested and held for the theft. He is sentenced to work out his time on the girl's farm, which leads to a love affair. This feature is not very convincing. This is hardly up to the average in strength.

THE CIRCULAR ROOM (Imp), July 28.—A two-reel subject, by Wm. Addison Lathrop, featuring Ben Wilson, Edna Hunter and others. The plot deals witb some foreign spies who blow up American munition plants. This is not extremely new in many respects, and the villainy is of an obvious type. At the same time considerable suspense is aroused in tbe second reel, where the girl is bound near an infernal machine. The hero saves her in the nick of time and the villains are blown up.

THE LATEST STYLE IN VAMPIRES (Victor), July 30.—A two-reel number, featuring Harry C. Myers, Rosemary Tbeby and Sidney Bracey. The former poses as a porch climber who breaks into the home of his former sweetheart, now married, or at least so the tramp alleges. His story afterward turns out to be a fake. The treatment in this wavers between the serious and burlesque, which weakens the effect decidedly. Some of the dark scenes do not come up quite clearly. The number as a whole is not very strong.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE TARANTULA (Vitagraph), July 17.—A strong six-part drama, featuring Editb Storey, Antonio Moreno, Harry Hollingsworth, L. Rogers Lytton and Cbarles Kent. The story concerns a young American who goes to Cuba. He meets a native belle, named Chonita, and accomplishes her ruin. Later, after being cast off by her father, the girl comes to New York as a dancer. She brings about the young American's death by means of a tarantula, of wbich he was in deadly fear. The production, in spite of its tragic nature, has a happy close and is beautifully presented. It makes on tbe whole a very strong emotional subject.

Bert Williams Comedies Successful.

No Question About the Success of the Two-Reel Comedies Featuring Famous Ziegfeld Follies Comedian.

SINCE the first announcement of the Biograph Company to the effect that they will release a series of two-reel comedies featuring Bert Williams, there has been quite a bit of discussion as to the possibilities of the big star of Ziegfeld Follies becoming the big king pin in the comedy field. There is no denying the fact that the public is eager for a big change in the comedy line, and while it is yet too early to predict anything for Williams, the chances are all in his favor. In a recent interview Gus Mohme of the Biograph Company said:

"I have just returned from a three-weeks' trip around the various General Film Company exchanges in the interest of the Bert Williams comedies and if the enthusiasm both on the exhibitors' and exchange managers' parts may be used as a barometer to measure the success of these comedies, then they are due for big business. And why not? There isn't a more popular or clever comedian on the stage than Bert Williams and the fact that he has been chosen again as the star comedian with Ziegfeld Follies and is turning the people away at two-dollar prices in New York despite the hot weather, bespeaks his drawing power. That alone is one good reason why he should draw equally as well at various moving picture theaters throughout the country. Bert Williams' ability to make people laugh is by no means limited to the stage, as we have proved in our first release. He has always been a big factor with his droll pantomime and characteristic expressions which register exceedingly well before the camera.

While the bookings the various General Film Company Exchanges have obtained thus far have been influenced by the popularity of Bert Williams, I have been very careful to note in my talks with the various exhibitors and exchange managers that the exhibitors have every confidence that Bert Williams will become very popular to motion picture audiences. Just how the public will take to the new line of comedies we are giving them can only be determined after the first or second picture has been released.

IVY CLOSE WORKING ON "PEACHES AND PONIES."

"Peaches and Ponies" is the euphonious title given to the one reel comedy in which Ivy Close is now working at the Kalem Jacksonville studios. The story finds Ivy a troubled bride with a hubby who spends most of his time over the racing charts and the past performances of Molly S., Gay Widow, and such steeds. When Ivy's suspicions are aroused over these supposed home-breakers she engages a near-Sherlock, played in ludicrous fashion by Henry Murdoch, with disastrous results.

Arthur Albertson, Frances Nemoyer, William McKey, C. D. Peruchi and Mary Taylor-Ross are among others in the cast of "Peaches and Ponies." "The Girl and the Tenor," the first Ivy Close comedy, will be released next Friday, July 28th.

"FATE'S DECISION" (Horsley).

A great question which should appeal to many husbands and wives who have suddenly discovered that their bonds of matrimony are becoming slack and that stone after stone is being laid for purposes confined to the divorce court, and all through a misunderstanding or an occasional party of the tango tea variety, is thoroughly and capably handled by the co-stars, Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, in the forthcoming Centaur feature, "Fate's Decision," a David Horsley production, to be released on the Mutual program the week of August 5.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"I'VE GOT YER NUMBER" (Universal).

Well, now; what have we here? A very unfortunate accident, it seems. These honest farmers were run down by the city chap, a loafer who has no regard for the proprieties of motor dress, as will be observed. Note his silk hat. What rotten bad form!

It must have disgruntled the honest farmers, moreover, to have the hussy in the machine with the city chap laughing at their discomfiture. However, they have the license number of the car, 113307 Cal., and there's a telegraph office in the Lankershim railroad station nearby and the city chap and his escort won't get far before the motorcycle cops get him, rest assured of that. Then will come a suit for damages which will enable the honest farmers to buy a new buckboard and a new horse, with perhaps enough left over for harness. Honest farmers on county juries generally impose stiff judgments against railroads and automobilists.

The smashup delineated herewith occurred in "I've Got Yer Number," a Joker comedy featuring Gale Henry and William Franey, which will be released on July 29. Supporting Henry and Franey are Charles Conklin, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti.

"THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY" ABOUT FINISHED.

The first episode of "The Crimson Stain Mystery" which is being produced by the Consolidated Film Corporation, at the Erbograph Studios will be completed within a few days. Those who are in a position to know, declare that this picture will be the strangest and the most unusual ever attempted in the way of a serial. President O. E. Goebel and Treasurer Ludwig G. B. Erb of the Consolidated Film Corporation are working day and night on the production. Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin who are playing leading parts in this mysterious picture are given ample opportunity to present the best work in which they have ever been seen upon the screen.

During the past week Mr. Goebel has signed a contract with Olga Olonova, a young Russian "vampire" woman whose work thus far promises to be the most startling ever seen upon the screen either in America or elsewhere. Miss Olonova claims to possess the most wonderful figure of any "vampire" who has hitherto appeared in the motion picture world. It is doubtful if her claim will be disputed after the remarkable studio scenes that are to be in this serial are thrown upon the screen.

Eugene Strong, a favorite young matinee idol, has been engaged to play the part of the artist in the production.

The advertising campaign that is being mapped out and will shortly be put into effect by the Consolidated Film Corporation, will be of the most comprehensive. "The Crimson Stain Mystery" will be released through the Metro exchange.

ESSANAY'S "RETURN OF EVE" SOON READY.

Essanay is soon to offer as one of the most artistic productions of the year, "The Return of Eve," featuring Edna Mayo. It is an out-of-door play, most of the exteriors of which were filmed in the beautiful dells of Wisconsin. The best camera experts of the Essanay organization worked on the play, and President George K. Spoor considers it a photographic achievement.

The company, headed by Director Arthur Berthelet and Miss Mayo has returned to the studios. A final trip for exteriors will be made to Philadelphia, where an ideal location has been found in a nearby suburb. Sets for the few interiors are now being constructed and filming under the lights will soon begin.

At the Dells the company had many interesting experiences among which were those of being constantly photographed by tourists, arising at 1:30 in the morning and lunching daily on hard boiled eggs. Eugene O'Brien, playing the principal supporting part to Miss Mayo, could stand for the tourists, but his poise disappeared utterly under the stress of rising at what he called "early in the evening," and the everlasting monotony of hard boiled eggs.

Miss Mayo was the target for perhaps 500 kodaks while working in the film. In no instance was the ambitious amateur photographer refused when pleading for a snapshot.

The costumes for the play, which deals with two orphan children brought up in a wilderness by an old tutor are as original as the story. Miss Mayo herself made her own attire.

The play in five acts will soon be released through V-L-S-E.

"BEAUTY" BRAND ON TWO-REEL COMEDIES.

Motion picture exhibitors and patrons have become so exceedingly friendly to the "Beauty" comedies in which such well known character comedians as Orral Humphrey, John Sheehan, John Steppling, and comedians Lucille Ward and Carol Halloway have the important roles, that the management of the American Film Company, Inc., has found it desirable and advisable to star these people in comedies and comedy dramas from the country's best humorists.

"THE CONFLICT" (Selig).

It is seldom that a more heart-stirring drama is released through regular service than "The Conflict," a Selig Diamond Special, announced for General Film regular release by the Selig Polyscope Company, on Monday, July 24. "The Conflict" was produced by Wm. Robert Daly from the story written by Rosa Raymond, and features such popular screen stars as Jack Pickford, Fritzi Brunette, Vivian Reed, Frank Clark, Charles West and Harry Lonsdale.

"The Conflict" tells the story of the sacrifice of Paul Gilbert, a young minister who, offered the pastorate of a fashionable church, refuses the advancement, to become pastor of Seamen's Bethel, located in the slums of a great city. When he resolves to forego his ambition, he also loses the love of Alice Scene from "The Conflict" (Selig).

Morgan. The perils and pitfalls encountered by the young minister in the city's slums, the regeneration of Nell Gail, how the minister saves young Harold Morgan from state prison and finally again wins the love of Alice Morgan, are just a few of the incidents carried in this gripping drama. The picture contains clear-cut photography and a succession of beautiful scenic effects.

"REPENTANCE" (Essanay).

This a strong drama dealing with the fundamentals of life, bringing out the test of a man's endurance to his principles. The story deals with a young man of deep religious convictions who is deeply in love with a woman of no faith. He tries in every way to point out the truths of his belief, but fails. His faith is stronger than his love and he gives the girl up to do missionary work abroad. There he undergoes terrible hardships in a fever-ridden district and after fighting for his people until exhausted returns home to recuperate. There he finds that his home town had just suffered from an epidemic and that his mother's life was saved through the nursing by the girl he loved. He decides that she is one with his life in service if not in belief and tells her of his love. He is more than overjoyed to find that she has been won in his faith through the work she had done among the fever-stricken people. John Lorenz and Anne Leigh as the principals do exceptionally clever work.

"HESPER OF THE MOUNTAINS" (Vitagraph).

Each characterization of Lillian Walker, Vitagraph's dainty dimpled star, seems to please more than its predecessor. Miss Walker's latest vehicle is "Hesper of the Mountains," a drama of the West, in which the excellent work of Evart Overton also stands out.

The exteriors in "Hesper of the Mountains" are magnificent, most of them being laid in a mountain range. The action of the picture is continuous, suspense is never lost and a few thrillers, such as the blowing up of a mining shaft by a gang of strikers, and a clash between the forces of the sheriff and the strikers, tend to give this picture a "punch" which will please any audience. In these scenes of disturbance Evart

Overton has the opportunity of presenting a strong, dominating character to good advantage.

Miss Walker is seen as a luxury loving and cultured Miss of the East, who, when forced to go West with her sickly brother, expresses a hearty dislike for the country, its customs, and its rough, uncultured men.

Others in a well chosen cast are: Donald Hall, Donald McBride, Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard, Rose Tapley, Templer Saxe, Lillian Burns and Josephine Earle. The picture is a five part picturization of the book by Hamlin Garland and was produced by Wilfrid North. It is a Blue Ribbon Feature, than which no better recommendation can be given any picture.

EMILE CHAUTARD DIRECTS "HEART OF A HERO."

Why did William A. Brady choose a French director to put on the Robert Warwick-Gail Kane picture of the American revolutionary period, "The Heart of a Hero," based on the life of Nathan Hale—when he has so many American directors at his disposal? This is the question that has been asked by many persons in close touch with the doings of the World Film Corporation, but none has yet ventured to ask Mr. Brady for a bill of particulars.

When it was decided to put on this picture, in which Clara Whipple, Alec. B. Francis, Frank Beamish, Mildred Havens and Clifford Gray, as well as a score of other well known players take part in support of Mr. Warwick and Miss Kane, Mr. Brady assigned Emile Chautard to produce the picture. If the stills taken to date and the first part of the picture, which has already been shown in the World film projection room, is any criterion of the success attending this play, it is a safe prediction to make that a standard will be set from which future military and costume plays will be judged.

Fully conversant with our American history, Director Chautard merely refreshed his memory on some of the more important roles played by Nathan Hale in our fight for independence against the oppressive yoke of British domination in 1776, and blending with this story of Hale's memorable heroic acts, the romance taken from Clyde Fitch's play of "Nathan Hale," he has succeeded in producing a technically correct play in all its artistic as well as historic details, while the delicate touch of romance running throughout the story makes it interesting and fascinating, a novel departure from the cut and dried variety of costume plays the public has been educated to expect. In this play, the costumes of the American revolutionists and the British soldiers were all made to order from designs and descriptions contained in reliable books, compiled by authorities on the subject, and not taken from any customers' stock.

Mr. Brady is so pleased with the excellency of this picture that he may decide to release it in either seven or eight reels, instead of the regulation five, which has marked World Film productions in the past.

LICHTMAN GETS CONTRACTS.

Al. Litchman, the General Manager of the Patriot Film Corporation, which is selling state-rights to "How Britain Prepared," has been in Chicago and other cities of the middle-west, for the past week, closing contracts for the rights to several territories in the west.

During the Convention Week in Chicago, Mr. Lichtman gave a special showing of the film for exhibitors, at the Colonial theater, where the picture is now playing. It is said that a great number of immediate and future bookings were the result of this showing, as well as the commencing of negotiations for the rights to several states.

The booth of the Patriot Film Corporation was very well attended during the exposition, a large number of exhibitors being attracted by the tremendous amount of publicity the picture has received from the daily papers throughout the country.

CLEVELAND PASTORS LIKE "WHO'S GUILTY?"

Manager Johnson of Pathe's Cleveland office has already made a drive on the ministers in his territory in connection with "The Grip of Evil." He sends in three letters from John I. Wean, Pastor of the Lakewood Methodist Episcopal Church, Lakewood, Ohio, another from Dwight J. Bradley, the Highland Church, Cleveland, Ohio who recently delivered a sermon on "Who's Guilty?" and another from Dan. F. Bradley, Pilgrim Church, Cleveland, Ohio. Each of these letters show deep interest on the part of the writer in Pathe's shows masterplot in fourteen chapters.

Ivan's "The Faded Flower" in Great Demand.

Making history in film circles is what "The Faded Flower," the latest Ivan feature is doing. Although not yet released the excellence of the cast had prompted hundreds of exhibitors to request for early bookings on this play. "The Faded Flower" which inauguates the new Ivan policy of 100 per cent. stories enacted in photo dramatic form by an all-star cast has resulted in hundreds of exhibitors writing to that concern congratulating them and requesting that this policy be continued.

Realizing that a cast comprising such noted stars as Marguerite Snow, Alma Hanlon, Rose Coghlan, Arthur Donaldson and Edward Mackay, who would ordinarily be featured alone, cannot be gathered together at a moment's notice, plans have already been consummated to secure for the next Ivan production actors and actresses who have achieved reputations in both the legitimate and screen worlds.

So far as the story for the next feature is concerned, it is sufficient that it will be from the pen of that noted dramatist, Ivan Abramson author of "The Faded Flower" and the other notable Ivan successes.

"Bettina Loved a Soldier" (Bluebird).

When "Bettina Loved a Soldier" is released in the regular order of Bluebirds, on Aug. 14, two of the prettiest girls in photoplays will lend their charms and talents to the occasion. Both Louise Lovely and Francelia Billington have been stars in previous Bluebirds and they are drawn into service for "Bettina Loved a Soldier" because of their peculiar adaptibilities to impersonate the two principal female characters. Rupert Julian will be the leading man, adding this extra service to his duties as director of the production. The work is based on L'Abbe Constantine, a book by Ludivoc Halevy that opened the doors of the French Academy to its author. Elliott J. Clawson prepared the scenario and Steve Rounds accomplished the photography.

The French locations incident to the plot have been beautifully counterfeited in this American production and those who recall the scenic and photographic charms of "Naked Hearts," in the Bluebird series, will expect from Rupert Julian, the same director, a finished product of superlative merit. This promise the Bluebird people maintain will be amply fulfilled in "Bettina Loved a Soldier."

Despite the "soldier" in its title and action, there is no martial spirit in the photoplay. It is the cleverest sort of comedy-drama, with an appealing love story, and the fact that Bettina (Louise Lovely), is compelled by the modest military man to do most of the courting, leads a series of charming episodes to a highly satisfying termination.

"WEIGHED IN THE BALANCE" (Pathe).

Tom Clark, son of the president of a large mill, is compelled to take up the task of supporting his mother and sister when his father dies after being requested to hand in his resignation. Tom goes to work at the foot of the ladder, and falls in love with Edna Carr, daughter of the foreman of the plant; but she is fascinated by Graham, superintendent of the works, and rather tires of Tom. The latter and Graham have an encounter, the latter getting the worst of it, and Tom's discharge is ordered. But he is popular with the men and a sympathetic strike is ordered. Young Clark urges them to refrain from violence, but it becomes necessary to call out the state troops. So great is the riot that the soldiers are compelled to fire on the men. Tom, in the front rank, is shot down and dies. Edna rushes to him, but it is too late—he is dead.

V-L-S-E "WHO'S WHO" IN DEMAND.

Because of the tremendous demand for its brochure, "Who's Who in V-L-S-E Plays," in which is listed all information relative to its plays and players, fifteen thousand of which have been distributed throughout the country, the Big Four has planned a second edition of more than 25,000 copies.

"TEMPTATION AND THE MAN" (Universal).

ing contemplating the warm summer days in store for her. Her arm rests on Sydney Bracy, he of the fur cap.

"Temptation and the Man," on which the Hill company was working at the time the picture was taken, is a Red Feather five-reeler written by Catherine Carr. Hobart Henley is featured in it, supported by Sydell Dowling, Bert Busby, Sydney Bracy, Joseph Granby and Clara Beyers. It will be released by the Universal on July 24.

EXHIBITORS MAY READ THE STORIES.

A novel step has been taken by the Kalem Company in connection with "The Girl From Frisco," by making it possible for exhibitors to read the stories of the first four episodes of this series featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman before they book the pictures.

"Go to the nearest newsstand," reads the Kalem announcement, "and buy a copy of the August issue of Short Stories Magazine. There you can read the stories of the first four episodes of this Western series by Robert Welles Ritchie."

"BOBBY BUMPS" (Paramount).

"Bobby Bumps and the Detective Story," Earl Hurd's drawing for the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, depends for plot upon Bobby's experiences as a bookworm and the complications which his fondness for the literature of the dime libraries leads to. Father finds Bobby engrossed in a volume of Deadeye Dick's adventures and promptly confiscates his book. A short time later Bobby finds that Father is locked in his room reading the censored volume. With the aid of his pointer pup and the skylight Bobby recovers the detective story. Father gives chase and the novel falls into Mother's hands and she becomes the most interested reader of the family. By a ruse Bobby again recovers his book, only to be plunged into fresh difficulties, which make him vow to give up the dime libraries completely.

Kemble Says He Will Produce

Brooklyn Exhibitor and Exchange Man Promises Pictures of Vital Interest in Public Life.

WILLIAM H. KEMBLE, one of the best known showmen in the East, emerges in a new field of the motion picture industry, as a producer and distributor of film, with "The Zeppelin Raids on London and the Siege of Verdun," in five parts, and "America Preparing," a ten-part spectacle. Mr. Kemble acquired "The Zeppelin Raids on London" after a successful run at the Park theater, New York City.

Mr. Kemble enters the producing field after many successful years as an exhibitor and exchange man in and about New York. His most successful ventures are the Triangle theater, in Brooklyn, Big "T" Film Corporation and, later, the Kemble Film Corporation.

Kemble at the time of the formation of the Triangle Film Corporation saw the possibilities of Triangle service and secured the exclusive right for Brooklyn and Long Island. His success can be judged by the fact that he controlled twenty-five per cent. of the motion picture service in Brooklyn. At the time of acquiring Triangle took over the old Crescent theater, Brooklyn. In fourteen days he transformed it into one of the handsomest theaters in the country, at a cost exceeding $50,000.

Mr. Kemble says that his concern, in entering actively in the producing and distributing of film, would limit its effort to such films as would prove of vital interest in public life at the time. Associated with Mr. Kemble are J. C. Miller, as treasurer, and H. Clark Mooney, secretary and director of all advertising and the policies of all Kemble's interests.

CHANGE TITLE OF VIVIAN MARTIN SUBJECT.

In place of "Nell of Thunder Mountain," as originally announced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company as the name of its initial release, starring Vivian Martin, this subject will be entitled "The Stronger Love." This production has just been finished under the direction of Frank Lloyd and was staged, chiefly in the San Bernardino pine forests at the top of the mountains, where many scenes of rare beauty were filmed. Supporting Miss Martin in her first Morosco vehicle is an exceptional cast, including: Edward Peil, William W. Jefferson, Louise A. Emmons, Alice Knowland, Herbert Standing and John McKinnon. Jack Livington, although originally in the cast, met with an accident in the mountains with the result that Director Lloyd jumped in to continue the character. The photoplay will be released the middle of August on the Paramount Program.

Notes of the Trade

TUMBLING over a dam and shooting a rapids gave Lillian Drew, Essanay leading woman, her most thrilling experience in pictures recently when she performed the stunt at Starved Rock, Ill. It worked out far more thrilling than the picture required, which pleased everyone except Miss Drew. She admitted that she was a frightened young woman during the experience and that swimming between rocks and rapids is a sport she does not care to adopt.

Director Roy Clements is awaiting the completion of a second photoplay for his star, Pat Rooney, having completed "The Bell Hop," with Rooney in the title role. "The Bell Hop" was written by Charles E. Van Loan especially for the comedy work of Rooney. While it is not fully decided, the next production will probably place Rooney in an environment of the American Indian.

Director Lloyd Charleton has his production of "The Shepherd," a five-reel feature, nearing completion, with Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson playing the leads, supported by Richard Morris and Alfred Allen. The story is by Elwood Hemming, and the scenario by Eugene B. Lewis, head of the scenario department at Universal City, and is classed as a society drama.

* * *

J. Searle Dawley is delving deep into the subject of the Black Art, alchemy, necromancy, fairy lore, witchcraft and all other kindred subjects in preparation for the producing of "Little Lady Eileen" by the Famous Players. It is an Irish story starring Marguerite Clark in which the fairies play an important part.

Vernon Howe Bailey's sketches of Washington, D. C., and of Petrograd are soon to be released by Essanay.

The Blue Ribbon Feature, in which Anita Stewart plays the role of a newspaper reporter, is scheduled for release by the Vitagraph Company the latter part of July. Others in the cast are Charles Wellesley, Frank W. Mann, Anders Randolf, Julia Swayne Gordon, Doc Donohue, Donald MacBride and Mr. Johnson. The production was directed by S. Rankin Drew.

Martin Sabine, the Unity director, has in active preparation for the concern a new screen drama dealing with the exploits of the captivating "crook" Crochard, "The Invincible," who figured in Mr. Sabine's other Unity production, "The Pursuing Vengeance." Mr. Burton E. Stevenson, the author of the Crochard series, states that Mr. Sabine is to screen all of these works.

Art Acord, Mustang-Mutual cowboy actor, recently injured when his mount fell during the filming of a scene for "Sandy, Reformer," a forthcoming Western drama, will be able to return to work in about two weeks, his physician recently announced. Acord, at first, was thought to have been mortally injured.

The second picture in which Barney Bernard will appear was written especially for him by Senor Andres de Segurola, the celebrated baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company. It will be produced for the Vitagraph by Paul Scardon. In this latest offering Bernard will play both the role of a grasping banker and that of a big-hearted pawnbroker.

Mutual has divided the Vogue comedy players into two companies. Rube Miller will direct one company with Roy McRay as assistant and with Ben Turpin and himself as chief funmakers. Lillian Hamilton, Harry Huckins and Evans make up the cast.

Henry Kernan and Jack Gaines will direct the other corps. Paddy McQuire, Arthur Moon, Ed. Laurie and Gypsy Abbott have the leads.

Marguerite Clayton is now working in another Essanay feature play in five acts. It is "Lost Twenty-Four Hours," and was taken from the famous stage hit. It will be her first venture in a comedy-drama of this length. In "Putting It Over," a recent two-act farce, she demonstrated her ability along these lines. In the feature play she will appear with Richard C. Travers and Warda Howard.

Valentine Grant, the Famous Players star, has returned to New York to make preparations for her next picture, which will be directed by Sidney Olcott. In her next picture she will play the role of a Scotch lassie.

"A Tin Soldier," a famous comedy by Charles Hoyt, is being produced in two acts by Essanay. None of the laughable situations of the stage play have been omitted. An admirable selection of types for this farce has been obtained and some beautiful settings—unusual in a picture of this length—constructed.

Juan de la Cruz is leading man to Edna Goodrich in "Body or Soul," the Morosco photoplay under construction. Like Geraldine Farrar, Juan de la Cruz has progressed from grand opera to the voiceless drama.

Roy McRay has joined the Mutual forces, and will assist Rube Miller in directing. He will also play important roles in these Vogue comedies. He has a keen sense of comedy situations and is as bright as a whip.

The return of Richard C. Travers to the Essanay studios after his three months in vaudeville, was marked by an immediate start in a new five-act feature play, "Lost Twenty-Four Hours," which was taken from the famous stage hit of the same name. He appeared in "My Country, Tis of Thee," a two-reeler on a patriotic topic, and then without delay filming of the feature was begun. With him in the play are Marguerite Clayton and Warda Howard. It is a fast moving comedy with numerous amusing situations.

Alan Hale, who recently completed a special engagement with the Famous Players, where he played opposite Pauline Frederick in "The Woman in the Case," has been engaged to play one of the leading roles in "Rolling Stones," another Famous Players production, under the direction of Dell Henderson. The engagement was arranged through the Amalgamated Photo Play Service.

Mutual has acquired some new faces, which will appear in Vogue comedies in the near future. Lillian Hamilton will be Rube Miller's new leading comedienne and will play in connection with Ben Turpin, Harry Huckins and O. Evans.

Margaret Gibson, the dainty little star of the David Horsley studios, and one of the most daring feminine actresses of the silent drama, which name she has justly earned through her fearless work in close contact with wild animals of many varieties, after a most trying season is enjoying a brief vacation for the first time in more than a year.

Children See Uncensored Pictures

Topeka Men and Women Uplifters Bring Along the Whole Blessed Family, Is the Charge Aimed at Kansas Censors—Some of the Hyperregulated but Ordinary Citizens Inclined to Be Peevish About It.

By Kansas City News Service.

TOPEKA, Kan.—A ludicrous situation has arisen in Topeka, Kan., with respect to the kinds of pictures that the board of censors believes the young people of Kansas should be allowed to see. For all the pictures that are censored have been, it is said, viewed before any eliminations are made by a bevy of girls and boys, among them the sixteen-year-old daughter of the Rev. Festus Foster, one of the censors.

The pictures are exhibited to the board in the basement of the State House. To these exhibitions it has been customary to invite various men and women who are interested in the uplift of the moving picture and the purging of the screen. It was perhaps natural that the women interested in welfare work should attend, for their suggestions doubtless were of value to the censors. But objection was made by somebody to the fact that the women frequently brought their daughters, and even their very young sons, boys five and six years old. It seemed, it was said, hardly proper that such small children should be allowed to see the uncensored films, which the parents were going to criticise for the benefit of the children of other citizens.

Mr. Foster was quoted as saying that he did not invite the young girls to the exhibitions, though he had not refused to allow them to remain.

When the report was spread that so many people, including the girls, were allowed to see the uncensored films, there was a division of opinion. Some were envious that these had been favored, while others were resentful that social workers considered the general public less able to control its emotions and regulate its own conduct than they were.

Kansas City Sorry to Lose Mills.

KANSAS CITY.—A piece of news that strikes the moving picture men of the Middle West with a sense of personal loss is the removal of E. C. Mills, not only from Kansas City, but from the moving picture business. Mr. Mills left the Kansas City Mutual office July 15, to become a special representative of the Interstate Amusement Company, with headquarters at Chicago. This company is the largest vaudeville booking house in the country, handling perhaps the best strings of theaters.

On second thought, the moving picture men of this section realize that Mr. Mills will keep right on working for things that will be for the benefit of the industry—just as, before he became identified with pictures, his enterprises reflected benefit upon pictures though immediately intended for the good of vaudeville and theatrical performances.

Mr. Mills joined the Mutual forces just a year ago. And his first work for pictures, even before he had taken up duties with the Mutual, was the organization of the Amusement Association of Kansas—for he had a very large part in that project. One of his particular ideas for that association was that it should include all branches of the industry—and include also the vaudeville and theatrical people, which it does. Mr. Mills at Kansas City was a prime mover for the Screen Club. And he has in this past year been called upon dozens of times for help in local troubles, where taxes or licenses or Sunday closing, or censorship or bickerings among exhibitors were interfering with proper development of business. He has given very largely of his time and spent much of his own money in such work.

Elliott Will Enlarge Sapphire.

Kansas City.—A. E. Elliott, manager of the Sapphire theater, noted as the smallest moving picture theater in Kansas City, is about to make radical changes in his house. Ultimately the improvement is to go to the extent of an entirely new building, which will increase the capacity from 185 to 660. Mr. Elliott has secured a lease on land adjoining his present house, and will probably build in the course of a year. The building itself will be designed for office purposes upstairs, and will have five stories.

New Rialto Winning on High Prices.

Kansas City.—The New Rialto is undoubtedly helping considerably to keep life in the picture business and maintain the pep of the downtown exhibitors. Here is a house that had been going slow at a nickel that has been turning 'em away now at 25 cents! "Driftwood" was put on for six days, with attendance of about 1,000 a day, in a house with a seating capacity of 240. It will be brought back for another engagement. "That Sort" will be brought also—it was shown at 15 cents. The New Rialto has proved that people would rather pay a little more, even in hot weather.

Wichita Wants to See 'Em Sundays.

Wichita, Kan.—A petition is being circulated calling for a special election to vote on the question of opening the moving picture theaters on Sunday. If the petitions receive sufficient signatures the election will be held on the same day as the August primaries, so that the cost will be inconsiderable. If this opportunity for an expression of public opinion in a formal way is lost it is not likely that a vote could be taken for perhaps a year, as the officials probably would not inject the Sunday closing question into the fall election.

Injunction Against Operators Dissolved.

Kansas City.—Judge Seehorn of the Court of Appeals has dissolved the injunction against union operators which temporarily had prevented them from picketing the Eastern theater. They are now free to picket the place, as they have been doing for several weeks. Their grievance is that the machine is operated by a non-union man. The operator is John E. Hughes, one of the owners, formerly a member of the union, whose membership automatically ceased when he bought an interest in the theater.

Swofford Takes Over the Garden.

Kansas City.—The Garden theater has been sold by J. J. Swofford to Samuel Davidson of Fort Worth, who has recently acquired large realty holdings in Kansas City, including a handsome residence. The theater is under lease to the International Attractions Company, which will put on theatrical entertainments.

K. C.'s Screen Club Getting Along.

The Screen Club of Kansas City is not letting any grass grow under its feet. Frank Newman, president, is pushing the enterprise through at a rapid rate. The first things to be done are the selection of quarters and equipment. Quarters probably will be arranged for immediately upon the return of the exhibitors from the Chicago convention. They will be centrally situated, downtown, probably on Main street. There will be reading rooms, amusements, a projecting room, probably equipment for refreshments, and every facility for enjoyment and for the entertainment of visiting members of the industry. The membership cards are now being sent around, signed by the new secretary, L. J. Scott.

Forty-four Houses Book Pathe Serial.

"The Grip of Evil" promises to be a worthy successor to "The Iron Claw" in Kansas City territory. The Pathe exchange now has the latter booked in forty-four theaters in Kansas City; one of the first contracts is now expiring, and one of the best suburban theaters, the Bancroft, is just now starting this serial.

Zueker Leases the New Center.

Kansas City.—Samuel Zueker, of Chicago, president of the New Center Amusement Co., has leased for ten years, at a total figure said to be $60,000, the New Center theater, now being erected at the southeast corner of Fifteenth street and Troose avenue, with a seating capacity of 1,200 on the ground floor. It will be opened about September 15. It is said that Mr. Zueker, who has many theaters in Chicago and nearby, will move the headquarters of his enterprises to Kansas City.

Glasser to Manage Denver Theater.

Kansas City.—W. B. Glasser, who has had charge of the "Girl and the Game" department of the Mutual at Kansas City, has removed to Denver, where he will be manager of the Paris theater. Mr. Glasser was secretary of the Screen Club of Kansas City. His place has been filled by the appointment of L. J. Scott, publicity man for the V-L-S-E at Kansas City, and everybody who knows the moving picture industry at Kansas City knows that the work will be well done.

Cincinnati Operators Ask Increase

In Return They Concede Under Certain Circumstances an Added Half Hour on the Day's Work—Receiver Asked for Highland Film Corporation—Dayton Exhibitors Trying to Organize in Effort to Better Conditions.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—Negotiations are now on between moving picture exhibitors in and around Cincinnati and their operators with a view to adjusting the working agreement for the two years beginning with August 1, on which date the agreement under which the houses are now working expires. The operators want an increase of about 10 per cent. in their wages, on the one hand, and the exhibitors desire certain changes in their favor in the matter of overtime, matinees, etc., on the other. So far the discussions have been entirely amicable.

The operators have submitted a proposal in which their request for higher wages is included, but in which also they concede an extra half-hour of regular working time to houses running matinee and evening all the time, giving them seven and a half hours instead of seven as a day's work. They also change the overtime rate from 75 cents an hour or fraction thereof to 25 cents a reel. These changes were made at the suggestion of the exhibitors and will probably furnish a basis for getting at an agreement. It is understood that a number of houses have already signed the agreement on the basis of the proposal in question, and there is little prospect of trouble on this score.

Receiver Asked for Highland.

Cincinnati, O.—The Highland Film Corporation, organized in Cincinnati about a year ago with ambitious plans for the operation of a big moving picture producing plant in or near Cincinnati, has collapsed, judging by developments of the past week or so. Following a meeting of stockholders, principally Cincinnati people, at which former President James T. Ford, the principal promoter of the company, declared that he would personally assume responsibility to the stock holders for their investment in the company, suit was filed by William J. Spinner, holder of ninety shares, calling for a receivership. The suit alleges that the company is solvent, that its business has been misconducted by the officers, and that the company's assets are in danger of being dissipated. About $14,000 in stock was subscribed locally, it is reported. The company originally planned to establish a studio at Fort Thomas, the government military reservation on the Kentucky side of the river, and more recently made an offer to purchase the Zoo for use as a producing point and general amusement resort. Mr. Ford attributes the failure of the company to developments in the producing field looking toward the consolidation of various interests, which he declared meant that independent producers could not profitably do business in the future.

Screen Club Plans Big Doings.

Cincinnati.—The Cincinnati Screen Club, which numbers many of the leading film men and exhibitors as well as newspaper representatives in the city among its members, is planning a combined moving picture ball and musical comedy presentation for some date in the fall which should be one of the most notable events of the sort ever held in Cincinnati. A meeting is to be held shortly at which plans for bringing in a large additional membership will be discussed, and at that time the club will take action in connection with the proposed screen celebration. The fact that Cincinnati is the home of numerous moving picture and stage celebrities, including such bright lights as Marguerite Clark, Theda Bara, Trixie Friganza and numerous others, and is a theatrical center of some importance, is relied upon as adding interest to the event, and it is believed that an attendance of screen players can be expected.

V-L-S-E Hunting New Quarters.

Cincinnati.—Manager C. E. Holah, of the V-L-S-E exchange, has been extremely busy of late with the string of big features which he is now handling and with other matters of importance pressing for his attention. Incidentally, it may be mentioned that he has again been forced to go on the hunt for new quarters, as the Seventh street location has already been outgrown. A location in Opera place, the theatrical and moving picture Rialto of Cincinnati, is under consideration. Local employees of the Big Four recently received their quarterly profit-sharing checks, which are stated to have been very satisfactory.

Daytonians Trying to Get Together.

Dayton.—Dayton moving picture exhibitors are again making an effort to get together and form a really effective local organization, under the direct auspices of the Greater Dayton Association, the big business body of the city. Most of the exhibitors are and for a long time have been in favor of getting together to remedy certain conditions which obtained a foothold in the city, and the present movement therefore has good chances of success. Val Rayburg was the last president of the Dayton organization, and Dr. J. Q. Alexander was secretary. One of the principal reforms aimed at will be the adoption of a standard size program for use by all houses, to eliminate the excessively large bargain programs which have been seen in Dayton for some time past.

Mr. Stueve Is Surprised; No Wonder.

Canton.—A bit of orange peel carelessly dropped by somebody in front of the Odeon theater, nearly two years ago, has resulted in a suit against the theater by Herbert H. Wingerter, who asks Owner Robert C. Stueve for $7,016 damages. He alleges that it was negligence on the part of the management to permit the bit of peel to remain near the entrance, and that he fell upon it, suffering various injuries. The suit came as a considerable surprise to Mr. Stueve.

MICHIGAN GLEANINGS.

Petroskey.—Norman J. Feldman, formerly manager of the Temple theater, is in charge of the new Palace theater, which opened here July 1. Charles Gálster is the lessee. The equipment includes a $25,000 organ orchestra and two Power 6B machines.

Alma.—J. E. Miller has opened his new Idle Hour theater in the Rockwell block, which has been under construction since last fall.

St. Joseph.—The Caldwell theater had a camera man film the Fourth of July crowds. Naturally everybody wanted to see themselves on the screen and big business resulted.

Kansas City.—Fred Pickrell, formerly manager of the Mission theater, Ponca City, Okla., one of the best known exhibitors in Oklahoma, is now with the Pathe exchange, Kansas City, covering Southern Kansas and Northern Oklahoma territory. This was the territory formerly handled by Howard E. Jameyson, now in the office at Kansas City.

OREGON NEWS LETTER.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland.

Portland Censors Report.

Portland.—The report of the censor board for June shows 852 reels, or 351 subjects, viewed. Eliminations were ordered in 25, and 2 subjects, comprising 10 reels, were condemned. The number of reels viewed is the largest in the history of the censor board, although not the greatest number of subjects. This indicates an increase of long features. The Reliable Film Service imported a great number of reels during the past month which helped make the above record.

The T. & D. Bumped by Censors.

Portland.—The T & D, Portland's largest photoplay theater, recently suffered more grief at the hands of the Portland censor board. The board's viewers refused to pass the World feature, "The Weakness of Man," the Saturday before the Sunday show, and Manager Leonhart had his hands full rustling a new program for the next day.

"Doc" Crews Calls.

Portland.—C. S. Crews, owner of the Liberty theater, Walla Walla, Wash., and familiarly known among the road men of the Northwest as "Doc," was a recent visitor in Portland. It is very seldom that "Doc" gets to Portland these days, since most of his booking is done at Seattle and Spokane, but this time he bought a ticket to the Rose City just to see his old friends. The boys on Film Row all have a kindly feeling toward "Doc" Crews.

Al Sather in Vaudeville.

Portland, Ore.—Al Sather has given up the management of the Ideal theater and has entered vaudeville as a member of the Washington Trio. He left recently for California, where his act is reported to have been booked over the Pantages Circuit. Charles Connell has taken his place as manager of the Ideal.

Ministerial Support for Pictures.

Salem.—The Rev. James Elvin, of the First Congregational Church, believes in motion pictures. Furthermore, he practices his preachings. Nearly every week he shows a film subject on the screen in his church, and his name is at nearly all of the exchanges in Portland for regular service. "The Horrors of War" was shown at his church recently, also the Portland Rose Festival films. Mr. Elvin usually lectures on the subject shown on the screen. An admission price is charged, and he always has capacity audiences. Arrangements are being made to show "Les Miserables" and "The Life of Our Saviour" soon. Mr. Elvin is an ardent photoplay "fan." He has been quoted as saying that the average photodrama of today is not unclean if seen through clean eyes.

Heard on Film Row.

Baker Ore.—Haish & Cotter, owners of the Grand and Orpheum theaters, have acquired the lease on the Empire, which recently closed. The house will be remodeled and opened.

Portland.—H. W. Wilson, road man for the General, recently returned from a successful trip to the eastern part of the territory.

Portland.—Indications are that the theatrical map of Portland is due for another change. A proposed vaudeville circuit in which John Cort is said to be interested has been negotiating for the Heilig theater, and a proposition to erect a theater building on Washington and Broadway has been talked of for some time. These rumors, together with the uncertainty of the Orpheum location, have been the cause of much conjecture on Theater Row.

LETTER FROM CAPITAL CITY.

Exchangemen Disturbed Over Practice of Returning Films on C O D Basis.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth Street, Washington.

SEVERAL Washington exchange managers are up in arms over the practices of certain of the exhibitors in this territory who resort to unseemly means of settling disputes without the consent of the exchanges. Several instances of this kind has been brought to our attention of late, in each of which the exhibitor has returned films to the exchanges C O D. The sums thus deducted are usually too small to warrant securing the reels from the express companies under a writ of replevin, but it is understood one company is considering other means of dealing with offenders. It may be an effort will be made to have these men charged with some offense, possibly of securing money under false pretenses or of larceny. Several of the cases were where the amount of the C O D shipments were in the neighborhood of $15 each. One exhibitor had some sort of a grievance, just what he did not say, nor has he told the exchange manager what his kick is as yet; he sent his films back C O D.

Another case was where the exchange shipped out a show on Friday night to a southern exhibitor. Some time later a cancellation was received by telegraph, too late to stop the shipment, which had already gone. These films had been sent out as C O D, and upon arrival it is stated that the exhibitor lifted the C O D, used the show and then returned it to the exchange C O D. Still another case was where a C O D deduction was made for quite an amount because paper had not accompanied the films, yet this exhibitor sent the paper back to the exchange some time after the show had been returned.

These are declared to be schemes which no legitimate exhibitor would practice and the exchanges are up in arms.

Three Film Men for the Border.

Three more film exchange employees are noted among the men who are soon to be sent to the Mexican border with the Third Regiment of the National Guard of the District of Columbia. F. E. Taylor, formerly booker for the General Film Company, has resigned that position to take up his military duties. M. Weissberger has been sent to take his place from the New York office.

Pathe, Inc., loses two men from the poster department, John Cunningham and Milton Yudelevit.

Leo Garner Returns to Washington.

Leo Garner, who severed his connection with the United Film Service some months ago, is back on the job with the title of manager of the office. Since leaving Washington he has been employed in Petersburg, Va.

Glad Hand Out for Visiting Elks.

The Elks owned Baltimore last week. Incidentally, the Elks owned Washington also. The glad hand was out for all members of the B. P. O. E., not any more for the one than for the other, yet the exchangemen had a very cordial welcome for those of the trade who strayed over. Among these were many of the Southern exhibitors, including John W. Pryor, a member of the firm of Pryor Brothers, of Danville, Va. Mr. Pryor states that despite the heat, business is quite good, and he predicts a successful fall and winter season.

Others among the visitors were C. O. Moss, Pathe's representative in the State of Virginia, and Cliff Godsey, another old-timer, who formerly represented the United Film Service. Louis Weiss, of the Twentieth Century Film Company, of New York, who also is an Elk, visited a number of friends here among the exchanges.

VIRGINIA NOTES.

Danville.—Pryor Brothers have secured control of the Broadway theater here and now have all of the houses of Danville, including the Bijou, Strand, Empire and Majestic. The Empire was recently taken over and closed. Since then the Strand also has been closed. The Broadway was operated by the Piedmont Amusement Company and was managed by Richard Castelbery. In commenting upon their holdings, J. W. Pryor said: "We expect to reopen one of these houses when the season starts in September, and at that time we will switch our service around somewhat so as to give each house what it can best handle."

Petersburg.—The Strand theater, which was opened here a few months ago by a corporation of which Messrs. Korman and Gassenheimer, of Washington, D. C., were the leading members, has been taken over by the Schlossburg Amusement Company.

Lynchburg.—The Belvedere theater has been undergoing some very extensive changes and many new improvements have been made. The house has been enlarged and the seating arrangements have been changed with the result that each patron is given the benefit of additional space and comfort. The management is now installing one of the largest Wurlitzer organs in the South and has engaged Earl Ball, an expert, to handle it. C. M. Casey, an old time show man, is owner of the Belvedere. Guy Barrett, one of the best liked, most popular young managers in the South, is in charge.

Spokane's Threatening Commissioners Meet from Moving Picture Men Threats of Recall—An Emergency Ordinance.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane.

SPOKANE, Wash.—Never in the history of Spokane has there been as much excitement in the amusement life of this city as in the present quarrel between the city officials and the theater managers, more especially moving picture men. The adoption of a strict censorship ordinance was closely followed by the exhibitors circulating a referendum petition, then cuts were ordered in "The Birth of a Nation" followed by a suit in court won by the city which decided that it could make such orders.

Despite this the publicity created an increased demand on the part of theater people to see the production. Therefore Spokane witnessed its first $2 moving picture production which included music by a 30 piece orchestra, the prices of seats ranging from 25 cents to $2. Local critics declared that the production was too great a work to be affected by a few eliminations and practically a full house greeted the opening performance of the rejuvenated Griffith production which was shown here a year ago at from 25 to 75 cents.

This court action angle of the fight brought forth a threat on the part of the commissioners to enforce Sunday closing and the exhibitors have retaliated with a threat of circulating a recall petition against all of the commissioners who vote to sustain such action. The presentation of an emergency ordinance to the commission, for adoption, is the latest move at the date of this writing.

The new ordinance was drafted by Commissioner of public affairs F. K. McBroom known as an emergency ordinance to supplant the one held up by a referendum petition. This petition contained 4,249 names, 67 of which were of non-residents, and the petition was criticised by Commissioner McBroom for that reason. As there cannot be another special election before December it is probable the franchise will be voted on then.

The emergency franchise just presented to the commissioners for adoption practically substitutes the one held up in that it provides a fine of $100 or 30 days in jail for violation of same and prohibits the exhibition of any picture or play tending to be obscene, immoral, licentious or improper.

The commission also established a rule that the production "Where Are My Children?" to be shown at the Casino, for a week, starting July 9, shall be shown only to persons over 18 years of age. Will T. Reid, manager of the Casino, announced that he had previously decided to exclude those under 18 years of age from seeing the picture.

Cotter and Haish Buy Empire at Baker.

Spokane, Wash.—About 18 months ago Joseph P. Cotter of Spokane, where he was for a time in the advertising department of the Spokesman-Review and later with the Home Telephone Company, went to Baker, Oregon, where he joined forces with M. B. Haish in taking over the Grand and the Orpheum theaters under the name of the Majestic Amusement Enterprises. Later Mr. Cotter took unto himself a wife, a pretty Miss Holzer, who had nursed him when he was ill in the Sacred Heart Hospital, Spokane. Still not satisfied with their success of the amusement venture which included some vaudeville attractions with their moving picture productions, word has just been received that Messrs. Cotter and Haish have closed a lease for the Empire theater giving them a monopoly on the business in the Oregon city. They will remodel the Empire and install motion picture machines. They contemplate opening the house soon.

The Baker paper says: "Cotter and Haish have given Baker good service in vaudeville and motion pictures and by securing the third theater will be in a better position than ever to secure the best concessions from the film companies, and can maintain a high standard of service. They have taken an interest in matters of public welfare in Baker and have always been willing to lend their services to any public enterprise. They have been liberal users of newspaper advertising."

Films to Teach Care with Fire in Woods

Spokane, Wash.—In co-operation with other national forestry reserve work throughout the Coeur d'Alene country the Coeur d'Alene Forestry department, of Idaho, and Forestry men of the Northwest have selected the moving picture film as an assistant educational feature of their work. They will show pictures in different houses of how carelessness and small fires lead to fires which destroy property valued at millions of dollars, also many lives in the great Northwest almost annually.

Meyer Wolfle, supervisor of the forestry, arranged for the release of these films in Wallace and Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; Newport, Wash.; Libby, Great Falls, Helena; Billing and Bozeman, Montana, July 7. Other sections throughout the country which are in forest sections will have the pictures exhibited.

The pictures show "What a Careless Hunter Can Do"; "The Work of the Forest Range"; "Recreation and Watershed Protection"; "In a Forest in Utah"; "Live Stock Grazing on National Forest Ranges"; "Yellow Pine Logging in National Forests"; "A Forest Fire in California"; "Lodge Pole Tie-Making in Utah," and "Lodge Pole Lumbering in Colorado."

Portland.—Among the out-of-town visitors at the exchanges were: Mrs. Henrietta Leiter, owner of the Arcade, La Grand, Ore.; E. Hettum, Majestic theater, Kalama, Wash., and Miss Verne Ross., owner of the Dime theater, Toledo, Ore.

Fights for Men, Finery for Women

That's the Kentucky Idea, Set Forth in a Philosophical Disquisition on What's What on the Screen by Our Louisville Correspondent—An Essay on the Infant Question.

By C. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starke Building, Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—Leading exhibitors during the past few months have found that in advertising there is nothing that "gets over" to the public so much as playing to the personal, or making the appeal personal. While the public of today is many centuries removed from the cave man, at the same time there is an underlying streak in the nature of the average man as well as woman to which strength appeals. Fight pictures, not in the sense of boxing matches, but where the wronged man is returning to primitive means of settling his wrongs, appeal to hundreds and thousands of people the world over. The leading theater managers of Louisville have found out that attendances gained toward the end of runs of pictures in which there was a good fight or strong scene, showing that the public talked about what appealed to it, told its friends, and the result was that these same friends came to the house to see a few rounds of a good realistic scrap. Therefore it pays to make such scraps look realistic. They go especially well in such states as Kentucky, where boxing matches have been barred by law for many years. Many managers now make capital of a fight picture in their reading notices in the newspapers, and have found that it pays.

To the feminine mind nothing appeals quite so strongly as clothing, hats, or shoes—in fact finery of any kind. Exhibitors have also taken advantage of this characteristic of human nature in advertising and have found that it succeeds. In this connection the writer may refer to an advertisement in the form of a reading notice that recently appeared in a local paper, and which caught many eyes, "Fine Gowns Worn by Miss Burke."

While few women can afford such gowns as are seen in "Gloria's Romance," at the same time they all take keen interest in seeing them, especially when advanced styles are advertised in connection with the picture. So long as the style show is not overdone in the picture it is not likely to drive away any of the male trade, which has acquired an ingrown aversion to the word "clothes."

Infant Proposition No Small Affair.

Louisville—The infant proposition has for years been one that has bothered more than one exhibitor. The proprietor of a small theater out in the state recently advertised that the price of admission was 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children, and that a ticket would be required for each seat occupied. Enforcing the regulation would probably be comparatively easy in a small theater, of 250 seats, in a country town, but in the larger city with a theater seating 1,000 or better it is a fairly hard proposition to spot the infants occupying seats not paid for. One of the local managers has left it with his doorman to decide whether or not an infant was of a size to occupy a seat. His judgment is final. If the infant is a babe in arms, and one that could not very well occupy a seat under any condition, it is passed through, but children of two or three years of age, heavy children who are going to occupy a seat shortly after passing the door, must have tickets before entering. Many parents will carry such a child into the theater in order that it may get a seat free, but the child will be noted walking out later. During rush hours a child at 5 cents is a poor investment for the house, and should not be countenanced at zero if it expects to occupy a seat. This house does not encourage bringing small children to the regular performances at all, and has found that hard and set rules have kept seats open for adults who were paying for the privilege.

Broadway Boosts Photoplay Contest.

Louisville—The Broadway Amusement Enterprises has started a new photoplay contest in connection with the Walnut, Broadway and Baxter theaters. The contest will run from July 15 to August 24. A cash offer was made for the best scenario and one was secured.

Rex Cuts Prices for First Time.

Louisville—The Rex theater, formerly the Novelty, went from 10 cents to 5 cents on Sunday, July 16. The theater is one of the oldest of the medium-sized downtown houses, and has played at 10 cents since its opening in the fall of 1911. Prices may be raised again next fall, when business picks up with cooler weather.

Small Town the Thing, Says Bradbury.

Louisville.—Harry W. Bradbury, of Louisville, formerly operator of the old Columbia, who for the past year or two has been operating a chain of small theaters in Southern Ohio and Indiana, was recently in the city visiting relatives and old friends. Mr. Bradbury stated that after trying his luck with many theaters he had found that the best paying investments he had made were in the smaller cities. In the larger cities the people have been spoiled and want too much for their money. In order to give them the class of films they desire it is necessary to have a big seating capacity and get large crowds at every show. Mr. Bradbury believes the ideal way to handle pictures is to get a string of good small houses where each can turn over a net profit of about $50 to $75 a week.

Winchester's Pastime to Extend.

Winchester.—Arthur Bloomfield has returned from New York, where he spent his vacation and made arrangements to book a few special films for the Pastime. A number of improvements are contemplated at this theater. It is proposed that the rear of the building be carried back in order to increase the seating capacity about 100, giving the theater a total seating capacity of 500.

Irvine Company to Build Theater.

Irvine.—The Irvine Amusement Company, according to President A. L. Corbett, is preparing to move its main office to Winchester, Ky., where the company is proposing to erect an opera house to cost from $50,000 to $75,000. J. E. Stivers, general manager of the company, recently took an option on a corner lot as the proposed site. F. A. Ogden is manager of the company's Queen theater, at Winchester. It is proposed to use the new building for pictures and regular stage productions.

Operator Rogers Loses an Eye.

Louisville.—Norman Rogers, an operator at the Olympic theater, lost his left eye a few days ago while hunting with a party of friends near South Park. He received a scattered charge of shot, one of which pierced the eyeball. He will recover.

Charles H. Porter Reported Missing.

Charles H. Porter, 25 years old, formerly connected with several of the local picture theaters, has been reported officially as missing on the European battle front, where he was fighting with the Canadian Mounted Rifles, with which troop he has been since June, 1915.

Star Recovers from Fire Damage.

Lagrange.—The Star theater has remedied the recent fire damage in the operating room, and is running again, having lost scarcely any time. The damage was fully covered. The main loss was to the machines and a few reels of film.

Pikeville's Royal Opens.

Pikeville.—The Royal theater has been opened under the management of Warren Beverly, of Elkins, West Va., who has considerable experience in moving picture exhibiting.

Mills Continues to Operate Gem.

Maysville.—Harry C. Mills, proprietor of the Gem theater, who recently filed a petition in bankruptcy, is continuing to operate the theater under orders from the court. The schedule shows liabilities of $5,883.60 and assets of $6,514. The largest creditors are Arn & Simons, from whom the theater was purchased for the sum of $2,100. The property will probably be sold at public auction by the receiver.

Kentucky News Notes.

Winchester.—The Queen theater has been leased by the Irvine Amusement Co., and was opened on July 1.

Henderson.—The Grand Opera House has been leased to the Hays & Ragan Company, and will be completely remodeled.

Beaver Dam.—The Opera House has been converted into a moving picture theater. It is now operated on Thursday and Saturday nights. Pathe service is being used.

Louisa.—D. J. Burchett has opened a new picture theater in Louisa. The house has a seating capacity of 250.

Campbellsville.—W. I. Meador has taken a three-year lease on a new theater, which will be equipped with heating and ventilating systems, a stage large enough for vaudeville, and all modern equipment throughout.

Paris.—Harry Mitchell, acting for himself and his partner, John Lechleiter, has closed a deal with John Eliott, president of the Colonial Amusement Company of Lexington, Ky., for the sale of the lease and good will of the Paris Grand Opera House.

Lagrange.—A small boy who recently lit a match at the Grand theater, Lagrange, accidentally set fire to a reel which was being inspected by the operator before being put on for the evening show. The film exploded, and the room was in flames in a second. The fire department with chemical extinguishers put the blaze out, the only damage being to the operating room, which was insured. There was no one in the theater at the time.

Maysville.—Harry C. Mills, proprietor of the Gem theater, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy and has asked that a receiver be appointed.

Louisville, Ky.—The Idlehour Amusement Co., of Louisville, was recently incorporated with a capital stock of $1,800 to operate picture shows. The incorporators are Floyd Whitehead, Henry T. Kraft and F. L. Wilhoit. Through a typographical error it was stated that the capital stock of the company was $1,800,000.

ITEMS FROM OMAHA.

Howard Grebe and Louis Rachman, cameramen, made 5,000 feet of film of the mobilization of the Nebraska National Guard at Lincoln.

Guy Clements has sold the It theater to Mrs. Shreve.

Features only will be shown by the Airdome, at Thirtieth and Farnam streets, during its fifth season. All benches have been white enameled, the entrance is green, in harmony with big trees, and the walks are of white crushed rock.

ITEMS FROM LONE STAR STATE.

By A. B. Harrison, Box 389, Dallas, Tex.

Dallas Man Takes Border Pictures.

Dallas.—W. M. Bird, manager of the Fox Film Corporation at Dallas, recently visited the Mexican border for the purpose of taking motion pictures of the troop movements for his company. The pictures taken in El Paso and along the border will be shown at the Hippodrome theater in Dallas.

United Program Has New Location.

Dallas.—The United Program Film Service of Texas has moved into its new quarters at 1911½ Commerce street. It was formerly situated at 1919½ Main street. D. E. Boswell, general manager, spent the week of July 3 in Dallas and assisted E. T. Peter, manager of the Texas office, in getting straightened out in the new quarters.

Plans for New Theaters in Houston.

Houston.—It is rumored that Houston is to have another hundred-thousand-dollar house this winter. There is also to be a new theater in the Fifth Ward. It is being built by Tony LaMotta. This will make three shows for this part of Houston.

Theater Burns at Laredo.

Laredo.—The Strand theater was burned on July 2, the fire starting in the building next door. This house was one of the finest on the Mexican border, and was owned by the Royal Amusement Company of San Antonio. The house will be rebuilt at once.

Pharr's National Totally Destroyed.

Pharr.—When half of Pharr was burned on July 3, the National theater, belonging to W. E. Gage of that city, was burned to the ground. The house will be rebuilt at once.

Another Producing Company in Houston.

Houston.—Houston is to have another new producing company. This is known as the Fickes Film Company, which started its first picture July 3. The picture features Miss Bessie Daniels and E. S. Legarde.

Poster Mounting Plant for Houston.

Houston.—Morris Schulman and H. E. Boswell have opened a new poster mounting plant in Houston. Mr. Boswell is well known in this part of the State, having managed the Houston office of the United Film Company for about eight months. Mr. Schulman was formerly house manager of the Pastime theater of Houston.

Bell Enterprises Handling Only Cartoons.

Galveston.—The Bell Enterprises, Inc., of Galveston, Texas, is having success with the Mutt and Jeff Cartoon pictures. Mr. Bell has sold his features to the Fidelity Film Company of Houston, retaining the cartoons.

Among Texas Exhibitors.

Sherman.—W. B. LaNicca, who has been managing the Topic theater, has gone out of the picture business and is now a knight of the grip. It is not known at present whether or not the Topic will be continued.

Houston.—T. O. Tuttle, manager of the General Film Company, is taking a well-earned vacation. Mr. Tuttle has been in bad health for some time and says he expects to spend his time on the gulf coast off of a railroad where they never heard of moving pictures.

Humbel.—J. R. Williams has succeeded J. R. Hess as manager of the Moonshine auditorium at Humbel. Mr. Williams was formerly connected with the Washington theater at Dallas. Mr. Hess owns a theater in Edna, and will return there to look after his interests in that city. J. R. McChesney is owner of the Moonshine auditorium.

Houston.—The Houston Heights Natatorium is the first small summer park in Houston to take up pictures.

Taylor.—"Candy" Jim Athas, who recently owned and managed the Candy theater at Taylor, but sold out and went to Mineral Wells, has returned to Taylor, having reopened the airdome in that city.

Fort Worth.—The Strand theater at Fort Worth has suffered a total loss by fire. This is one of the J. D. Wheelan theaters.

Mineral Wells—George W. Parks has sold his interest in the Lyric theater at Kingsville, and has purchased the Dreamland theater at Mineral Wells.

Houston.—W. F. McFadden, formerly of the Lincoln theater at Galveston and the Beacon theater at Houston, is now connected with the Texas-Louisiana Film & Supply Company of Houston.

Moulton.—Fred Marburger of the Gem theater at Shiner has opened a new show at Moulton. This is Moulton's first picture theater.

Houston.—The Key theater at Houston is being remodeled and reseated. Miss Johnson, the popular manager of the Key, has selected some very attractive chairs for her theater.

Houston.—Clarence H. Schippe, leading man and director for the Fox Players, Inc., of Houston, is putting on the production of "Baby Mine" at the Majestic theater of Houston, using the Fox Stock Co. It is being put on as a benefit for the Central High School Association.

FROM OKLAHOMA.

El Reno.—H. C. Bradford has recently taken over the Jewel theater at El Reno and closed the Cozy theater, which he has previously been managing.

Chickasha.—Ben Johnson, owner of the Sugg and Kozy theaters here, has purchased the Empress theater here, and closed it. W. C. Blackstone, former manager of the Empress, has been retained by Mr. Johnson as manager of the Kozy, and J. L. Oliver, who has been connected with Mr. Johnson for some time, will continue as manager of the Sugg.

NEWS FROM PINE TREE STATE.

By John P. Flanagan, Bangor.

BANGOR, ME.—Manager Thomas Williams, of the Nickel theater, which has just opened on Union street in Bangor, has purchased a 6A Power machine.

The Bijou theater in Bangor has discontinued for the summer and is now showing Triangle pictures at 5 and 10 cents admission.

Manager H. P. Smith of the General Film Bangor office has sold a Power 6B to Ross & Armstrong of the new theater at Vanceboro, Me. There is a show every Saturday.

Messrs. Stern of the Universal, Smith of the General and Borroto of the Mutual exchange, all located in Bangor, report that business is better than ever before in eastern Maine.

Portland.—George Appleby, former manager of the Jefferson theater, now connected with the Mutual Exchange in Boston, has been assigned to temporary work in the southern Maine territory.

Seal Harbor.—Odd Fellows hall is now showing Mutual pictures under the management of Joseph Emery of the Star, Bar Harbor, who recently opened this little summer house.

Rockland.—Oakland Park, a summer place under the management of the Rockland, Camden & Thomaston electric railway, is open for the summer and is showing Mutual pictures, secured through Manager Borrotto at Bangor.

Bangor.—S. Schultz, a former Aroostook County exhibitor, now on the road for George Kleine, reports a big demand all through Maine for "Gloria's Romance," which he has leased to theaters in Portland, Augusta, Gardiner, Bar Harbor and Northeast Harbor.

Millinocket.—Edmund Breese and Ormi Hawley are at Millinocket with Director Revier and a company of sixteen filming scenes for "The Iron Hand," a five-reel production, the feature of which will be a blow up of a log jam and a fight between the hero and the heavy in midstream. Scenes will be taken at Orono, Costigan and Bangor on the Penobscot River.

Alhambra Adding 500 Seats.

Cleveland, O.—The Alhambra theater, one of the largest East Side houses, is soon to close for a four-week period in order to permit the installation of a balcony. This will give the house more than 500 additional seats. Other houses which have announced closing for a few weeks during the hot weather are the Manhattan and the Marvel theaters.

Boise Wins Sunday Opening Battle

Idaho's Supreme Court Declares Theaters May Legally Open on Sabbath—As Result of Year-Long Fight Mayor Is Recalled and Retires to Private Life.

BOISE, Idaho.—After a fight lasting over a year the Supreme Court of the state declared that Boise's theaters could legally open their doors on Sunday. The first Sunday show after the decision was put on on July 2, and all the theaters arranged special feature programs for the occasion.

The history of the Sunday closing, or rather Sunday opening fight, shows it to have been a factional one between the so-called reform element on one side and the liberal-minded citizens on the other, rather than a political fight. A majority of the councilmen favored the opening of Boise's theaters on Sunday and an ordinance was passed toward this end. It was vetoed by the Mayor. As a sequel to the controversy the Mayor and one councilman, both of the so-called reform element, were recalled by a special election.

While exhibitors expressed themselves in joyful terms when the outcome of the fight became known, their attitude w s not vindictive. They have offered to cooperate with the city's churches wherever possible and have signified their intention to run appropriate Sabbath day programs.

General Film Closes Butte Office.

Butte, Mont.—The General Film Company withdrew its office from Butte and will handle the business in this territory from Spokane and Salt Lake City. The company felt that the distribution of service could be handled more effectively from these two points. Fred C. Aiken was in Butte arranging the closing of the office. The change went into operation on July 9.

Censorship Dead in San Francisco

Believing the Bay City Public Is Against It, the Police Committee of Board of Supervisors Pass Up Whole Question—Dan Markowitz Installed as Manager of General Film Branch—Other News.

By T. A. Church, 1607 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The censorship question, which was discussed at such length a short time ago, and which for a time occupied almost the exclusive attention of the police committee of the Board of Supervisors, has been allowed to lapse, and no further action will be taken on the proposition of establishing a legal board. Discussions that were to have been held on this question have been postponed from time to time by the police committee, and a member of this body recently stated that there was no intention of bringing the matter up again, as it was clear a board of censorship was not wanted.

The admission made several weeks ago by one of the members of the committee in a public hearing that he favored the censorship of moving picture films because he feared that the screen would be used to favor prohibition in the coming campaign has been a strong factor in bringing the discussion on this question to a close. The liquor interests did not relish the prospects of any controversy in which they would be involved and at once made overtures for peace, virtually securing from exhibitors and exchange men an agreement that nothing would be used in moving picture houses either favoring or opposing prohibition, and at the same time agreeing to keep out of the censorship fight. Exhibitors have nothing to fear from the present censorship ordinance, as the board is not a legally appointed body and has dwindled down in active membership until what work is done is handled by two or three. The recent attempts to supervise a showing of "Twilight Sleep" and the stinging rebuke it received from a local judge illustrates how its influence has waned.

Charles Klopot.

San Francsico.—Charles Klopot, of Los Angeles, was a recent visitor here and has made arrangements for the opening of a branch of the California Comedy and Feature Film Company in this city. Quarters have been taken over at 120 Golden Gate avenue, in the heart of Film Row, and the new exchange will be opened for business as soon as a stock of films can be brought from the South. In addition to conducting a film exchange at Los Angeles Mr. Klopot has a branch at Phoenix, Ariz., but states that the latter may be moved to another State.

Maurice Levison Leaves for Seattle.

San Francisco.—Maurice Levison has severed his connections with the Apex film exchange on Golden Gave avenue and has left for Seattle, where he will take charge of a branch of the New Film Corporation, to be opened at 1216 Third avenue. Marion H. Kohn, of the Apex exchange, is still away on a trip to the southern part of the State and the local business is being looked after by Ernest Bru.

Books First Release at Portola Theater.

San Francisco.—J. L. Warner, of the Warner Film Attractions, recently gave a private review at the Tivoli theater of the first release of this concern, "The Prima Donna's Husband," produced by the Triumph Film Corporation and featuring Holbrook Blinn. Mr. Warner has booked this for the first run at the Portola theater for the week of July 23. He plans to leave shortly for Los Angeles on a brief business visit.

New Manager for General Film.

San Francisco.—Dan Markowitz, well known in the California field as a film exchange manager, but more recently engaged in this business in New York, has been appointed manager of the local branch of the General Film Company and arrived here early in July to take over this position, succeeding H. H. Hicks. Mr. Markowitz at one time had charge of the Universal exchange at Los Angeles and is especially well known there.

Film Representatives Visit Coast.

San Francisco.—Ben S. Cohen and Ned H. Spitzer, representing the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, were recent visitors here to make arrangements for the release of the productions of this concern.

Dave Bershon Visits Old Home.

San Francisco.—Dave Bershon, formerly of this city, but now manager of the Universal exchange at Los Angeles, where he succeeded J. V. Bryson, was here a short time ago renewing acquaintances.

Charles I. Luntz, Bluebird Manager.

San Francisco.—When Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., opened a branch at 125 Golden Gate avcnue early in January of the present year a stranger in the San Francisco field was placed in charge in the person of Charles I. Luntz. That he has met with marked success here may be judged by the splendid manner in which Bluebird productions have been placed in this territory and the large number that have been shown in the finest photoplay houses in the city.

The success achieved by Mr. Luntz is due in a large measure to the thorough preparation he has had for work of this kind and to his experience in film exchange activities in other parts of the coast territory. He was formerly engaged in the mercantile business in New York city, but came to the Pacific coast and started with the California Film Exchange at Los Angeles in 1913, filling positions as shipper, booker and road man. After being with this concern for two years he was placed in charge of the branch of the Universal at Phoenix, Ariz., a position he filled for six months. He covered Arizona with the Williamson Submarine Pictures and then took charge of all special features in the Southern California territory for the Universal. Last October he joined the forces of the World Film Corporation at Los Angeles and left there to take charge of the Bluebird interests at San Francisco. A fine business has been enjoyed here during the past six months and Mr. Luntz is very enthusiastic over the outlook, stating that conditions are improving all the time.

Charles I. Luntz.

Secretary of Screen Club Resigns.

San Francisco.—Joe Huff has resigned as secretary of the Screen Club of San Francisco, owing to the press of business duties, and this position is being filled temporarily by R. F. Cohen. Plans have been under way for some time for some special events at the Screen Club, but the holding of these will probably be postponed until after the vacation season.

Rialto Shows Mobilization Films.

San Francisco.—The Rialto theater on Market street has been featuring a news film during the past week showing the mobilization of the National Guard at Sacramento, these pictures having been taken by the Fox Film Corporation and are the first of the kind to be shown here. As San Francisco has sent a large quota of troops the pictures are of great interest locally.

Animal Comedies in Demand.

San Francisco.—The animal comedies made by the E. & R. Jungle Film Company and handled through the Peerless Feature Film Company are in good demand here and are showing at some of the largest houses.

Big Business with Chaplin Feature.

San Francisco.—Vivian Preston, representing the Independent Film Exchange, 122 Golden Gate avenue, returned recently from a trip by automobile through the territory south of San Francisco as far south as Santa Maria with a four-reel Chaplin production, "Charlie's Stormy Romance." In a number of theaters all former records for attendance were broken, due to the manner in which the attraction was advertised.

San Francisco News.

Ray Duhem, who conducts a large finishing plant at 700 Hayes street, made a trip through the San Joaquin Valley early in July and made a number of interesting pictures.

Work is progressing rapidly on the Royal theater, at Polk and California streets, and it is anticipated that this will be opened early in August. This will be one of the finest suburban houses in the city.

The Winters theater, at Mission street and Templeton avenue, on the site of the old Peninsula theater, has been sold by Charles Moser to Mrs. Pendergast.

Mr. Calmy has returned from a trip as far south as Los Angeles. While away he made a number of bookings for the Independent Film exchange.

Northern California Jottings.

Richmond.—Davis Brothers, who until recently conducted a poster exchange in San Francisco, have taken over the Regent theater on Macdonald avenue, between Eleventh and Twelfth streets, and are so well pleased with the outlook there that negotiations are pending for the erection of a new house for their use.

Lodi.—Ed. Stark, for several years in charge of the Grand theater at San Francisco, is now conducting the Tokay theater with Walter Hoges.

Porterville.—The Monarch theater will be ready for occupancy early in August, construction work having progressed rapidly of late.

Redwood City.—The new theater of Ellis Arkush, who now conducts the Sequoia theater, will be opened early in August. Mr. Arkush recently purchased a Westinghouse motor-generator set and Caille ticket selling machines as a part of the equipment of the new house.

Louis Hyman With Sol L. Lesser.

San Francisco, Calif.—Although comparatively a newcomer in the film exchange field, Louis Hyman, with Sol L. Lesser, is already rated as being one of the best exchange men in this territory. About two years ago he joined the staff of the Golden Gate Film exchange and a few months later was transferred to the All Star Feature Attractions, Inc., with which he has been ever since. He had charge of the booking of "The Spoilers" and assisted with "Cabiria" and "The Christian," some of the great successes handled by this firm. When the Kleine-Edison releases were secured he had full charge of the booking of these.

Since taking up film exchange work he has made it a point to make frequent trips through the northern California territory to make the personal acquaintance of exhibitors and to learn their needs. When Leon Netter left for the East some time ago he became assistant manager of the All Star Feature Attractions, Inc., and has full charge of the bookings. He is but twenty-two years of age, but in this instance youth has not proved a handicap to success. He enjoys the full confidence of those with whom he is connected, as well as the exhibitors with whom he does business, a combination that augurs well for his future.

MINNEAPOLIS NEWS LETTER.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Tribune.

Two Houses Hit by Fire.

Minneapolis.—Fire has visited two moving picture theaters in this city. The Crystal suffered a loss of about $500. The Eagle theater was damaged $1,000. Neither theater had been in use for several weeks.

Unicorn Helps Managerless Houses.

Minneapolis.—The Unicorn exchanges have offered to furnish their services free each week to any picture house which is lacking a manager due to his call to the border. Manager Woolf is doing his best to get in touch with every exhibitor in this territory whose business is to be affected as a result of his call to the colors.

Hodupp Visiting Pathe Exchanges.

Minneapolis is playing host to Victor H. Hodupp of New York city, assistant to Mr. Seeley at the Pathe home offices. Mr. Hodupp is making the rounds of the Pathe exchanges in the interests of his chief in order to give the home office a first hand knowledge of the film situation throughout the country and especially in their own exchanges. Mr. Hodupp formerly was the manager of the Pathe Chicago branch. He came to Minneapolis after visiting Chicago and Pittsburgh.

"The Iron Claw" Wins.

Minneapolis.—At a recent contest conducted by J. A. Booth, manager of the Ha Ha theater here, the public was given an opportunity to vote on their favorite serial with the understanding that the most popular story should be brought back for a return engagement. "The Iron Claw" was the favorite.

Manager Blaisdell Goes with Guard.

Canby, Minn.—The Iris theater here is without its popular manager, C. M. Blaisdell, and is likely to have to go without him for some time to come. Mr. Blaisdell is a member of the Minnesota National Guard and is in camp at Fort Snelling (Camp Bobleter), near Minneapolis, with his regiment.

General Covering Big Territory.

Minneapolis.—The General Film Exchange here now has one of the largest territories to serve of any exchange in the country or any service. The recent closing of the Butte (Mont.) office and its merging with the Minneapolis exchange gives this office a district extending practically from Milwaukee to Seattle, half way across the continent.

Glasgow.—The new theater in this city will be known as the Lyric theater. It will be devoted entirely to pictures. Coughlin & Rouse will be in charge.

Crosby, Mont.—Ralph Saller of Westby, Mont., has taken over the Photoplay theater.

Lemmon, S. D.—This city is soon to boast of a thoroughly modern and up-to-date picture theater, the Marcus. Lew Fein is to be manager.

Jordan, Minn.—Work has been started on a new picture theater in this place.

Shakopee, Minn.—The Gem theater here is now controlled by Frank Viegel, of St. James, Minn.

Caledonia, Minn.—Frank Maher has bought control of the Empire theater at Chippewa Falls, Wis., from R. J. Neumann, who expects to go on the road selling pictures.

Marion, S. D.—A moving picture theater is to be opened here by John Heintz.

Minneapolis.—Henry Friedman is the new manager of the Minneapolis Pathe exchange. He formerly was in the exchange at Washington, D. C. He takes the place of S. B. Sampson, resigned. Mr. Sampson may go to Indianapolis.

Fargo, N. D.—W. L. Hester has been promoted to the managership of the Laemmle offices at this place to succeed Lee A. Horn. Mr. Horn resigned to become associated with the Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment Company at Minneapolis.

Marshall, Minn.—The theater at this place has been turned into a film house. Mrs. C. M. Mast is proprietor.

Kirkhoven, Minn.—A new theater is being constructed here. Alfred M. Jacobson is behind the venture.

Winona, Minn. — The Schlingerman building here has been made over into a moving picture theater and will be called the Strand. Harry Rolbicki is manager.

Jackson, Minn.—The formation of a $100,000 company, known as the Minnesota Historical Film Corporation, has been announced here.

Conclave Aids Buffalo Exhibitors

Two Hundred Thousand Shriners Make Things Busy for Downtown Houses, but Residential Theaters Suffer—Batavia Operator Probably Fatally Burned—New Road Men for Mutual—Other News from Eastern Lake District.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—More than 200,000 visitors were in this city the week of July 10 to attend the Shriners' national conclave. The downtown moving picture theaters profited by the convention, but the houses in the residential districts suffered from poor business because thousands of their patrons visited the business section to enjoy the parades and other outdoor amusements that were a feature of the entire week. Shea's Hippodrome, the Strand, Palace, Olympic, Lyric, Family, Happy Hour and Keith's, all downtown houses, were brilliantly decorated with the Shriners' emblems and colors and American flags. Manager Franklin of the Lyric featured "the smallest Shriner in the world." J. H. Michaels, manager of the Academy theater, furnished a special program of amusements at a banquet at which 24,000 Shriners were present. Al Kader Temple of Shriners, of Portland, Ore., brought to Buffalo 5,000 feet of moving pictures showing the beauties of Portland and vicinity and boosting for the 1919 convention for that city. The film was shown at a special exhibition at the Strand theater, Buffalo, July 13, and was accompanied by appropriate talks by Portland Shriners.

Batavia Operator Badly Burned.

Batavia, N. Y.—As the result of an explosion in an operating booth of the Grand theater recently, Lamont D. Gillons, operator, was probably fatally injured. Beyond the fact that a film ignited there are only theories as to the cause of the explosion. Gillons has been unable to give a clear account of what happened. He was removed to the Batavia hospital, where, it was said, his body was badly burned. George Plock, employed at the theater as an assistant in the office, was slightly burned. There were about fifty persons in the house at the time. They made their way through the fire doors with little confusion. The booth was of fire-proof construction, and the flames which followed the explosion were kept within the steel walls. All the film was quickly consumed and the machine and other contents were ruined. The theater is owned by T. G. Thompson, Jr., of Rochester, and managed by George F. Flaherty of Batavia.

Rosing Takes Over Fillmore.

Buffalo.—George Rosing, former manager of the Fillmore theater, Buffalo, has taken over the house, which will be closed in August, to be completely remodeled. The Fillmore, which seats 1,200, will play features.

New Home for Ridgeway Orpheum.

Ridgeway, Pa.—The Orpheum moving picture theater will move into more commodious quarters near the former site. The new house will have a complete equipment.

Buffalo Capital Revives Arcade.

Buffalo.—Jim Wallingford, Daniel N. Hyman and Merritt N. Baker, who have been in the moving picture business in Buffalo for some time, have organized C. B. Keith's Arcade, with a capital of $5,000. The concern has revived the penny-in-the-slot business, featuring pictures and other amusements, which were popularized in Buffalo by Mitchel H. Mark about ten years ago.

Filkins Books Pathe Serial.

Buffalo.—N. I. Filkins, representing the Pathe Exchange, has booked "The Grip of Evil" at the Strand theater, Buffalo. Mr. Filkins was delighted with the booking, inasmuch as a serial at the Strand is an innovation.

New Road Men for Mutual.

Buffalo.—William Leyser, who was recently appointed a road representative of the Buffalo offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, has managed the Marlowe, Rialto and Family moving picture theaters in this city. His three years' experience as an exhibitor is an asset for him in handling his customers intelligently. As manager of houses he booked the Mutual pictures extensively and his familiarity with them is another advantage he has in soliciting business for that company.

Herman Lorence is another new road representative for the Mutual in this territory. He has been connected with the company in New Orleans, Kansas City, Dallas, Toronto and Montreal. He formerly conducted the Lee Avenue theater of Brooklyn.

Guntrup of Salamanca Doing Well.

Salamanca.—L. F. Guntrup of the Bijou theater, Salamanca, has moved across the street to his new house, which bears the same name. He is holding his own, despite the opposition of two larger houses. Mr. Guntrup projects from the rear of his translucent glass screen, using a 25-foot throw. This shorter throw gives him more seating capacity and saves him current. He is featuring "The Girl and the Game" and "The Secret of the Submarine." One reason for Mr. Guntrup's success is his use of up-to-date advertising and his courteous treatment of his customers.

Elmira to Make Local Picture.

Elmira.—The Mozart theater of Elmira and The Herald will have a moving picture production arranged with Elmira girls only in the cast. A voting contest to select the person taking the leading character is a feature.

Joseph Prady succeeds John O'Reilly as the proprietor of the Peerless theater of Bradford, Pa.

Edward Connelly has taken over the Majestic theater, Brooklyn Square, Jamestown, N. Y., formerly owned by J. Sutcliffe.

Fell Trees to Build Tommy's Theater

Canada's Sturdy Soldiers Clear Wilderness That They May Have a Picture Show—Temporary Tent Bears Name of Strand—"Where Are My Children?" Evades Ontario Censors but Is Destroyed in Express Car Fire.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street East, Toronto.

TORONTO, Ontario.—One of the most remarkable moving picture theaters ever established in Canada is the Strand theater at Camp Borden, Ontario, the military encampment for 40,000 of Ontario's overseas troops. Three months ago the area which has become the center of military activities for this province was a barren wilderness except for large expanses of primeval forests. A huge tented city has grown up overnight, however. The camp is miles from the nearest town of fair size and about seventy-five miles from Toronto. Entertainment was to have been supplied to the soldiers in two moving picture theaters under the control of the military authorities. The manager of one of these "houses," as announced last week, is M. S. Marvin, manager of the Strand theater, Toronto.

Marvin's Strand Theater, Camp Borden, Ontario.

Owing to a congestion of freight lines to the camp, Mr. Marvin was unable to have his theater ready before the big rush of troops to encampment began. He managed to secure a large marquee, with a seating capacity for 500, however, and he was given a temporary site for this big tent near one of the forests on the government ground. The accompanying photograph shows the tent-showhouse ready on July 10 for the first performance at night. In the foreground are the trunks of trees which were felled by the soldiers to make space for their theater.

The main attraction on opening night was the Fox feature, "Blue Blood and Red."

Canada Watching Its War Tax.

Toronto.—J. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer for Ontario, has issued the warning that Government officials have discovered a tendency among moving picture theater managers to become careless in connection with the reports and returns for the sale of war tax amusement tickets each week. He does not believe that the carelessness is intentional in many cases, he declares, but he hopes the exhibitors will take heed of his warning. It is also pointed out again that even a person who enters a theater for the purpose of witnessing a performance without paying the required tax is liable to a fine of the same amount as that imposed against theater owners.

Out of the Censors Into the Fire.

Toronto.—After the Ontario Board of Censors had refused to pass it for the Province of Ontario, the feature film, "Where Are My Children?" which is being handled in Canada by Clair Hague, general manager of the Canadian Universal, was sent to St. John, N. B. On the way the print was destroyed by fire when the express car was burned. Another print was immediately ordered by wire.

Mr. Hague is making arrangements for the screening of "The Dumb Girl of Portici" in the larger theaters all over Canada from the Toronto headquarters of the Universal. The minimum admission to any Canadian theater where the Pavlowa feature is being shown will be 25 cents, it is announced here.

The house organ of the Canadian Universal Company, known as The Bulletin, has been increased to an eight-page publication. One of several new departments is a column for "fans."

V-L-S-E Expands in Canada.

Toronto.—W. C. Gookin, Canadian general manager for V-L-S-E, has announced that as a result of the recent visit of Walter W. Irwin, the Montreal branch would be moved to more commodious quarters at 401 Bleury street. The premises measure 50 by 120 feet and there are various facilities, including a film vault, private offices, general display room and other essential features. The Toronto headquarters of the company will also be moved to a larger office shortly while plans are also being made for the opening of several more branches in Canada.

A. M. Wilbur Now Mutual Road Man.

Toronto.—Mr. Barrett, Toronto manager for the Mutual, announces that A. M. Wilbur, formerly associated with the General and World companies, has been engaged as a road man for the Mutual to work from the Toronto office. Mr. Wilbur is widely known throughout Ontario film circles.

Price Says the West Looks Good.

Toronto.—C. B. Price, Canadian general manager for the Mutual, recently returned from a seven weeks' tour of the Canadian West. He found satisfactory conditions at each Mutual branch and made changes in the staff at only one office, that at Vancouver. Immediately after returning to Toronto Mr. Price proceeded to Montreal for an inspection of Eastern Canadian conditions.

Toronto's Strand Fussing Up.

Toronto.—The operating room of the Strand theater has been equipped with two motor-driven double-reel capacity Baird machines. A new feature of this house is a private theater for private exhibitions. The whole front has been given a summery appearance through the use of large window boxes containing flowering plants and also large hanging baskets.

Items of Toronto Interest.

S. H. Howard, formerly of the Toronto Daily Star, has been appointed publicity manager for the Paramount Pictures Corporation, whose Canadian head office is at 12 Queen street east.

Leon Brick, until recently manager of the Auditorium, London, Ontario, has received the appointment as manager of the new Regent theater, a Toronto downtown house which will open in about one month. Mr. Brick is a former Toronto theater exhibitor. His son, F. L. Brick, has succeeded him as the director of the Auditorium in London.

Mrs. Wainwright has become the owner of the Criterion theater, Queen street and Northcote avenue.

E. A. Langley has been taken from the Toronto office of the Specialty Film Import Company, Limited, Pathe distributors, leaving J. Travis in sole charge of the local branch. L. E. Ouimet of Montreal, general manager for Pathe in the Dominion, paid an official visit to the Toronto office during the week of July 10.

Charles Hill, the new owner of the Rosedale theater, Yonge and Collier streets, has changed the name of this house to the Dorothy theater. This is one of the oldest theaters in Toronto.

MIDLAND MAKING AD PICTURES.

New Cleveland Concern Featuring J. A. Fitzgerald in Combination Comedies.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland.

CLEVELAND.—Preliminary to the construction of a studio on a tract of 150 acres near Rocky River, a suburb of this city, the Midland Film Manufacturing Company is making a novel series of advertising moving pictures. The pictures have a definite plot woven around the activities of one Weary Waggles, impersonated by J. A. Fitzgerald, former director of the Reserve Photoplay Company and now producing manager of the Midland organization. The pictures are being shown in many Cleveland houses and in other northern Ohio towns.

Officers of the Midland Company are George W. Scribner, of the Scribner-Loehr Jewelry Company, president; M. B. Fisher, of the American Can Company, vice-president; Thomas H. Nash, of the Cleveland Provision Company, second vice-president; R. W. MacDiarmid, candy dealer, third vice-president; H. P. Angel, secretary, and W. T. Findley, treasurer. Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and John H. Price are attorneys for the Midland Company.

Cleveland Screen Club Holds Picnic.

Cleveland.—The first annual picnic of the newly organized Cleveland Screen Club was held at Cedar Point, July 19. More than fifty members and their friends and relatives attended the affair. A baseball game between exchange men and exhibitors was a feature of the entertainment program. The score was not made public, but it is declared to have resembled a street number rather than a baseball tally.

The club is holding its regular weekly meetings in the new Hotel Olmsted. Permanent quarters may be secured there.

Exhibitors Postpone July Meeting.

Cleveland.—Hot weather and the Chicago convention have temporarily slowed up activities of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The meeting to have been held July 11 was postponed because many members and almost all the officers were attending the convention. Some of the members are planning vacation trips and it is likely that meetings will be held only twice a month until cooler weather. Arrangements for an outing of the league probably will be completed at the next regular meeting.

Reserve Photoplay in New Quarters.

Cleveland.—The work of remodeling the roof and upper floor of the Wilshire Building, West Superior avenue, has been completed and the Reserve Photoplay Company is now making its first two-reel comedy there. The picture, entitled "Casey in Mexico," stars Johnny Ray, and is a burlesque on the Mexican situation.

The new studio will accommodate four sets and in addition has equipment for outdoor work on the roof. The first studio was too small for the broadening scope of the work the company is doing.

Pathe's "Grip of Evil" Booking Well.

Cleveland.—J. R. Johnson, manager of the Pathe exchange in Cleveland, has just announced that in Cleveland alone "The Grip of Evil," released July 17, had 33 bookings a week before the release date.

ILLINOIS NEWS LETTER.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

CHARLESTON, ILL.—The Bankers-Merchants Theater Company of Chicago, which operates theaters in Chicago, the Maywood at Maywood, Majestic at Kankakee and the Garden at Harvey, has taken a ten-year lease on the theater which C. D. Mitchell will erect on Sixth street, near Jackson. The house, which is expected to open about October 1, will seat 720, and will be thoroughly equipped, including a pipe organ. The lessees will run high-class features and hope to open with "The Birth of a Nation." F. H. Gruneberg, president; O. H. Olston, secretary; W. O. Setcliffe, representative, and E. B. Herring were here to make the deal.

Peoria.—Dee Robinson of the Apollo theater has begun a series of Saturday morning shows for children. He started with "The Patchwork Girl of Oz." Mary Pickford in "Cinderella" was the second attraction.

Alton.—William M. Sauvage, the local impresario, is having his troubles furnishing a film program for the Piasa Chautauqua, where he has a two months' exhibition contract. Two films which are declared taboo are Vitagraph's "The Island of Regeneration" and Mayor Beall's vice film, "The Little Girl Next Door."

Decatur.—Charles and Edward Dorgan, owners of the Strand theater, are having plans made for a new 1,200-1,500 capacity moving picture theater to be erected down town at a cost of $25,000 or $30,000. It will be a ten-cent house and after its completion the Strand may become a five-cent theater.

Morris.—J. D. McKeen, owner and manager of the Empire theater, has leased the Primrose theater from J. B. Dawson, the owner, and has taken charge. Mr. McKeen will conduct both theaters. An outside balcony, electrically lighted, will be placed along the front of the building.

Rockford.—The Airdome on Charles street has been opened by Johnson Brothers, proprietors of the Royal theater. The Royal will be used for the shows when the weather is bad. Triangle programs will be offered Wednesdays and Sundays.

Rockford.—Moving Picture shows will be given Saturdays and Sundays in the Auditorium at Harlem Park.

Quincy.—The Bijou theater has discontinued musical comedy and is now confining itself to moving pictures and vaudeville.

MISSISSIPPI NEWS LETTER.

By Delta News and Publicity Service, Greenwood, Miss.

Happenings in the Delta.

GREENWOOD, Miss.—The Majestic theater, Greenwood, just installed a new $5,000 pipe organ, put in an excellent iced air cooling system and added fifteen fans, making it one of the coolest theaters in the South.

The coming of summer has been signalized by the opening of many airdomes throughout the South, especially in the Delta, and hardly a town can be found but what boasts of at least one airdome.

Under the direction of Mr. Brown of Jackson, Miss., a large open air theater, catering to negro patronage, has been opened in Greenwood.

That the people of the Delta prefer serials and series pictures is conclusively shown by the fact that the Majestic is now running three serials, viz., "The Secret of the Submarine," "The Social Pirates," and Gloria's Romance," while the Greenwood is running the "Iron Claw," and "Peg 'o the Ring."

Messrs. Richardson and Priestley of Rosedale, Miss. have opened one of the most up-to-date airdomes in the state at that city. The theater is floored, with a steady incline toward the front, ventilated at the sides, as well as the "blue sky" covering, thus giving its patrons benefit of the breezes.

P. E. Schilling, proprietor of the Greenwood theater, is out of the city on a business trip.

The Metro feature "The Wall Between" featuring Bushman and Bayne, attracted a large crowd at Coldwater, Miss., to the Majestic.

The first appearance of "Gloria's Romance" in Yazoo City, Miss., resulted in a packed house at both performances, and still all were unable to see the show.

Billie Burke in "Peggy" proved to be such an attraction in Greenwood that the Majestic theater was forced to run the same two days.

Manitoba Unkind to Traveling Shows

Under the Public Amusements Act "Cabiria" Is Set Back $874 for the Privilege of Showing at National of Winnipeg—Censorship in Abstract, Matter of Dollars and Cents.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver.

WINNIPEG, Man.—An illuminating example of the way the New Public Amusement act affects traveling companies presenting moving pictures in Manitoba and Saskatchewan theaters was furnished during the recent engagement of "Cabiria" at the National theater, in this city. Although those in charge of the picture expected to pay only a local license, it was discovered that before they could show the film a total of $874 must be paid, made up as follows: General license, $250; additional license on the subject, $600; censoring, $24. The largest item was collected through the provision in the act calling for a special tax of $50 per reel of film imported into the province, unless those handling the picture bring in at least one hundred subjects during the year, and is especially aimed at traveling attractions. This will give prospective purchasers of Canadian rights for pictures something to think about.

Censorship As It Is: Dollars and Cents.

Winnipeg, Man.—Winnipeg papers are commenting on the fact that Alberta is taking the cream off the moving picture work of Manitoba and Saskachewan, because that province refused to enter the joint censoring board recently established, but is now accepting the rulings of this board and charging the usual Alberta fee of $1 a reel.

It does not appear, however, that this is any hardship on the provinces maintaining the joint board, unless they object to having the citizens of Alberta receive the benefit of their wisdom without paying for it. The fact that Alberta refused to enter into the agreement simply means that the profit from the work of censoring is divided between two provinces instead of three, and Manitoba and Saskatchewan are now receiving half as much again as they would have had Alberta become a party to the inter-provincial arrangement.

Censorship and Politics Twins.

Victoria, B. C.—It is announced that the long-awaited provincial election will be held early in September, and the exhibitors of the province have already begun to figure on the changes which may be brought about after the votes are counted. While it is generally thought the present Conservative government will be defeated, it is realized the safest plan is to assume that an aggressive fight must be made, and although matters have not yet taken definite shape, it is thought some definite campaign will be organized.

The fact that the election of the Liberal candidates will mean that there will be a new censor and a new policy of censorship in British Columbia is enough to spur all moving picture men to energetic action in assisting to bring about the change. The film men of the province are almost a unit in declaring their belief that the present comparative leniency is nothing more than a "death-bed repentance," and that if the Conservatives are continued in power the cast-iron lid will be clamped down even tighter than formerly. Aside from the other aspects of the situation, to the picture man the question is a plain matter of dollars and cents.

Vancouver Pantages to be Fine House.

Vancouver, B. C.—B. M. Priteca, architect of the Pantages theater, which is to be erected on Hastings street, in this city, has awarded the contract for the structural steel. The Strand theater has been closed, as well as the hotel adjoining, and actual work of wrecking the buildings to make way for the new house will be started within a few days.

It is stated that the Vancouver Pantages will be the finest theater in the circuit. Mr. Priteca, in addition to designing several Pantages houses in the Northwest, was the architect of the magnificent new Coliseum theater in Seattle.

Nichols Directing National.

Vancouver, B. C.—President Tulk of the National Amusement Company, who has been actively managing the affairs of the company for the past month, has again turned over the reins to W. P. Nichols, managing director, who will hereafter be in active charge.

Kean Goes to Selig-Tribune.

Vancouver, B. C.—As the result of the recent visit to this city by E. B. Lockwood, Northwest representative of the Selig-Tribune weekly, A. D. Kean has been appointed the company's cinematographer for British Columbia, and has just sent in his first subject.

Where Six Isn't a Half Dozen.

Calgary, Alberta.—A fine question came up in the city council a short time ago regarding the requirements necessary to procure a theater license for certain premises. Promoters of a proposed Chinese theater had applied for a license, but as their building did not comply with the fire regulations the council had refused to issue the desired permit. City Solicitor Ford stated that as the building (an old garage), was not fire-proofed as required by law, a "theater" could not be conducted on the premises, but there would be no objection to issuing a license for conducting the place as a "concert hall." In this he was supported by Building Inspector Craig.

The promoters thereupon said that they had all along intended to use it as a "Chinese concert hall," and the license was accordingly granted.

Most councils are funny, but some are much funnier than others.

Vancouver, B. C.—C. B. Price, Canadian general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, has terminated his visit to Vancouver and returned east.

The work of altering and renovating the local exchange quarters has been completed under the supervision of C. R. Dippie, the Vancouver manager.

Rossland, B. C.—E. J. Cann, formerly musical director at the Regent theater in Calgary, has taken over the Star theater here, opening with Mutual service July 23.

Bay State's Outdoor Films a Success

Societies Behind the Showing of Health and Sanitation Subjects Appeal to Producers for Help—Difficulties to Be Overcome by Non-Professionals in the Way of Screens and Accommodations for Throngs.

By William M. Flynn, 80 Summer Street, Boston.

BOSTON and Massachusetts have had its first trial of the Out-of-Door Health and Sanitation moving picture shows as a medium of education in public health. It is the second year of public pictures in the metropolitan parks. The demonstrations have been a success in their way, but they have also proved that to be a permanent success some new features must be introduced. Already an appeal through the press has gone out for the professional motion picture producer to give his attention to the subject of the out-of-door pictures and solve the problems which now confront the amateurs in this line.

The first criticism made of the out-of-door pictures is the fact that the screens are too small and the pictures consequently too minute for an out-door gathering of 5,000 persons to view with good results. Something huge must be evolved to meet the requirements of the great assemblages in the public parks.

The first three demonstrations of the health films given at Franklin Field, Boston, drew crowds of over 5,000 each. Two and three night stands will be the rule in the various parks of the urban park system for the rest of the season.

Behind this enterprise are the Women's Municipal League, Massachusetts Child Labor Committee, Immigration Department of the State Executive Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association Boston Young Men's Christian Association, Boston Association for the Relief and Control of Tuberculosis, Instructive District Nursing Association, State Department of Health, Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Baby Hygiene Association, Boston Dispensary, Boston Young Men's Christion Union, Massachusetts Commission for the Blind, Boston Nursery for Blind Babies, Perkins Institute and Massachusetts Institute for the Blind, and the Poster Campaign of the Associated Charities. The cooperation of the Boston Park and Recreation Department, the licensing division of the Mayor's office and the Boston Wire Commissioner have helped to make the shows possible.

The shows were planned by a committee representing the various constituent associations. The predominating note of the free shows is hygiene and sanitation.

Convention Number Makes a Hit.

Most of the leading lights of the Boston moving picture industry are in Chicago this week. A tour of the big exchanges found a good percentage of familiar faces gone. One of the liveliest bits of comment of the exchanges and picture houses this week is the flattering comment on the Convention Number of the Moving Picture World. Everywhere the Moving Picture World man went he heard the comment: "Well, that convention number of the World was certainly a hummer." H. I. Wasserman, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, when seen at the Eagle theater, said: "That number is the best thing that has ever been done in the news-gathering end of the moving picture business. I am going to read it from cover to cover, but it's going to take me a long time to do it. It is full of invaluable facts for the picture house manager and I don't mean to lose a word of it. The Moving Picture World is to be congratulated on its fine efforts in behalf of the great picture industry."

Fred Murphy Returns from Tour.

Fred B. Murphy, eastern division manager of the Unicorn Film Service, has just returned from a complete tour of his exchanges. He maintains the one and two reel films are bound to keep a leading place in the moving picture programs and said that the cancellations that usually come at this time of the year are all missing. He said business could not be better and looks for a big rush when the regular season reopens in September. The summer parks, he says, are all using the one and two reel pictures as features of their programs.

Hot Wave Hits New England.

The hot wave that swept over New England this week caused a slump in attendance at the picture houses for the summer. Up to this time there had been reported the best business ever known during the hot months. The managers say they can now stand some summer weather after looking over their cash balances for June and the early part of July.

Bill Haddock to Make Local Picture.

Miss Alva Peterson, who is famed locally for her resemblance to Miss Blanche Sweet, won the "Who Will Be Flo?" contest conducted by a morning pape. She received 305,470 votes and will be the star of the moving picture, "Flo's Millions," which is to be produced locally and shown at the Tremont Temple. Miss Peterson lives in Somerville and is an unusually attractive girl. She hopes to make good in pictures and be able to leave her regular work as a stenographer to become a player. The photoplay will be produced under the direction of William F. Haddock, known to fame as "Silent Bill" and of wide experience as a picturemaker. He has been looking around Boston for several days selecting locations.

KENT FOR YOUNG EXCHANGE.

Former Detroit World Film Manager Now Looking for Quarters—Other News from Vehicle City.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building.

J. O. Kent.

DETROIT, Mich.—J. O. Kent, for the past three years associated with the Detroit office of the World Film Corporation, and manager for nearly two years, has tendered his resignation to become manager of the Detroit exchange shortly to be opened for the distribution in Michigan of the Clara Kimball Young productions. Mr. Kent is now looking for suitable quarters. The officers of the company controlling the Michigan rights are David E. Stott, president; Harry I. Garson, vice-president and general manager; Thomas Danahey, treasurer, and Bert Fenwick, secretary. The board of directors comprises Messrs. Stott, Garson and Danahey and Mrs. Martha L. Garson. The first Clara Kimball Young release will be in October; it will be shown at least one week, possibly two weeks, at the Broadway-Strand theater, with special settings, special music and special interior decorations. Mr. Kent is well known and well liked in Michigan filmdom. He formerly operated a theater in Saginaw, so has had both theater and exchange experience. As a member of the Detroit Screen Club he was active in the success of the ball given last May.

J. O. Kent.

Samuel Sembow, Jr., is temporarily in charge of the Detroit-World office pending the appointment of a permanent manager. Mr. Dembow has done special work for the World at Chicago and in the south for the past four months, and previously for a period of three years was a division manager for the Fox Film Corporation.

Harry Goldstein, Theater Man.

This is Harry Goldstein, vice-president of the Oakland Theater Company, which is building a motion picture house, amphitheater style, in Pontiac. Mr. Goldstein was one of the men responsible for the construction of the Majestic theater, Detroit. It was Mr. Goldstein who held the first option on the property at Woodward and Willis avenues, and then interested the late Arthur Caille in the site for theater purposes.

Harry Goldstein.

Alfred Weiss Visits Detroit.

Alfred Weiss, district superintendent, with headquarters in New York for the Triangle Film Corporation, was a visitor in Detroit for four days ending July 9 Mr. Weiss came on to install a new system in the local exchange and incidentally to look things over. "We have an ideal exchange in Detroit," said Mr. Weiss, "and we are getting a lot of splendid business from Detroit and Michigan exhibitors." From here Mr. Weiss went to Chicago.

Shapiro Signs Up Contracts.

Abe Shapiro, whose appointment as manager of the Triangle Film Exchange in Detroit has definitely been announced, has signed up a $15,000 contract with A. J. Gilligham for theaters which he controls both in Detroit and Grand Rapids; also a contract to supply Triangle service to the Bijou theater in Mt. Clemens, and the New Family in Adrian.

Lew Foster is special representative for the Triangle Films in Detroit.

Detroit Opera to Show British Film.

Al Lichtman, controlling the United States rights to "How Britain Prepared" was in Detroit on July 11 on his way to Chicago. While here he screened this wonderful film, and as a result it will shortly make its appearance on the screen of the Detroit Opera House for an indefinite run.

Regent Will Open About August 1.

The latest on the New Regent theater, Woodward and Horton avenues, which will seat about 3,000 people, is that the house will open around the first of August. This information was given by William F. Klatt, owner of the enterprise. Mr. Klatt is confident that the Regent will be one of the most beautiful playhouses in the country.

P. G. Courtney, New Empire, Old Timer.

One of the oldest motion picture theater managers in Detroit in point of years associated with the business is P. G. Courtney, now in charge of the New Empire, 189 Woodward avenue. Mr. Courtney came to Detroit from Columbus, O., about ten years ago. He immediately landed a position with William F. Klatt to manage the Vaudeville theater on Randolph street, now discontinued. Later he went to the Bijou theater on Monroe avenue, where he remained for nearly nine years, resigning to operate a theater for himself at Russell and Leland, and which he later sold. He started at the Empire four months ago. Mr. Courtney recalls with much interest his connection at the Bijou. He says that this theater, although upstairs and only seating 360 people, has played to as many as 6,000 persons in a single day.

Margaret Anglin Corp. Opens Offices.

Detroit, Mich.—James D. Barton, president of the Margaret Anglin Picture Corporation, which recently incorporated in New York for $750,000, was recently in Detroit and opened offices in the Dime Bank building. While here he announced that it was the intention of his company to erect a $100,000 studio in Detroit. A feature of the building will be a restaurant capable of feeding hundreds of people.

Casino Film Gets Ray Comedies.

Detroit, Mich.—The Casino Feature Film Co., 2206 Dime Bank building, Detroit, of which John H. Kunsky is the principal stockholder, has taken the John and Emma Ray comedies for the state of Michigan. They are being shown at the Washington theater, first run. The Rays at one time lived in Detroit.

In and About Detroit.

The opening of the Drury Lane takes place July 21 under the management of Frank Drew.

Jack Mowitt has signed a year's contract to manage the Globe theater, Grand River and Trumbull avenues.

The demolishing of the old church building at Woodward and Sibley streets has been started to make way for the new Colonial theater, which the Hoffman Brothers will have erected on the property.

Wesley Schram, owner of the Monroe theater, has leased the building at 36 Monroe avenue, and is remodeling the first floor into a theater which will be known as the Bijou. It will seat about 300.

Helmar George, now proprietor of the Central theater in Pontiac, has purchased a Wurlitzer organ equipped with a complete set of traps, bells, chimes and xylophones. Mr. George has made many improvements to the Century, and his new policy of playing all the big features that come along—advancing prices for some of them—is proving successful.

The Strand theater, the newest theater in Owosso, Mich., opened July 5. It is situated on North Washington street and cost $10,000. G. N. Finch is president of the company, E. S. Brewer vice-president and general manager; Frank Ryan, treasurer, and Major M. J. Phillips, secretary.

The various Butterfield theater managers will hold their annual convention at Battle Creek some time in August. At that time plans for the coming season will be announced. Work will start very shortly on Colonel Butterfield's new house to be erected in Flint and which is to be ready by the first of the year. This will give Colonel Butterfield three houses in the Vehicle City.

Bill Newkirk, manager of the new Palace Hippodrome, in Saginaw, announces that motion pictures will be the summer policy. In fact pictures may remain as a permanent policy if business holds up. This house opened originally with vaudeville and pictures.

Manager Wuerth, of the Orpheum theater, Ann Arbor, is erecting another theater adjoining, thus giving him two distinct auditoriums. In one the price will be 10 cents, while 15 cents will be charged in the other.

The Robin Hood, Grand Haven's newest motion picture theater, opened for business July 1. It is equipped with a $4,000 Barcola orchestra and the theater is one of the prettiest in Western Michigan. The lighting system is indirect, and there is good ventilation. The building is fireproof.

PITT SHOWS WAR PICTURE.

"How Britain Prepared" Drawing Crowd to Big Pittsburgh House.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH.—The Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, has been reopened after remaining dark during the week of July 10 to 15, and is now drawing big crowds afternoon and evening with the war film "How Britain Prepared." The picture is being shown with the greatest care and attention to detail that has characterized all of Manager Patch's offerings since the Pitt went into pictures. A symphony orchestra of twenty pieces is furnishing the musical accompaniment in a very effective manner.

Remodeling Roaring Springs Theater.

The Roaring Springs theater, Roaring Springs, Pa., has been purchased from A. R. Hamilton by W. H. Wood, of State College, Pa. The house is to be handsomely remodeled throughout during the coming month and new equipment and machines of the latest type are to be installed. Mr. Wood has made arrangements for showing Triangle and Paramount features, the very highest standard to be maintained in the attractions as well as in the theater itself. The reopening will take place about September 1.

New Incorporations.

Two concerns have been incorporated recently at Charleston, West Va., for the purpose of owning and operating motion picture theaters and other places of amusement. The Rialto Amusement Company was granted a charter through the following petitioners: F. H. Land, R. P. Devan, M. M. Wear, Alton M. Davis, W. B. Geary, Earnest Howell and W. S. Robertson, all of Charleston. The capital stock is stated at $10,000.

The Burlew Amusement Company was incorporated by S. A. Moore, W. S. Mason, P. J. Crowley, Samuel Stephenson and George O. Weeden, all of Charleston. The authorized capital is $5,000.

Curdy Writes Prize Scenario.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Lenore M. Curdy of Pittsburgh, Pa., wrote the prize-winning script of the scenario contest which was held recently by the Pittsburgh Press. The title of the scenario is "The Man and Millionaire."

Georgia Sabbath Bill Pending

Representative Neill Introduces into State Legislature a Bill That Would Stop All Kinds of Shows Sundays.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta.

ATLANTA, GA—Representative W. C. Neill, of Muscogee county, would clamp down tightly the lid upon Sunday moving pictures.

Under a bill he has introduced in the house, Georgia on the Sabbath would be devoid of visible merriment.

A former legislature enacted a law under which all theaters, moving pictures and kindred amusement places can be run on Sunday, provided no admission fee is charged. Under it, many picture show houses are, at present, given over to charitable institutions and organizations during Sunday of each week, with the understanding that no patron will be compelled to pay a fixed admittance fee, but is expected to voluntarily give according to his fancy in the name of charity for the privilege of enjoying the film performance. The money thus paid is not paid to any representative of the theater, but to a doorkeeper representing the club, society, guild or whatever charitable organization may be the beneficiary of the theater management.

This Neill bill, though, would stop even that, for it specifically stipulates against thus keeping motion picture theaters open on Sunday, and includes with them all theaters, concert halls, circuses, race courses and all other popular forms of amusement.

V-L-S-E Men Get Bonuses.

Employes of the Atlanta branch of the V-L-S-E corporation are in the happiest of moods. Each has been given a check, amounting to several weeks' salary, as his share of the company's profits. The home office decrees that any employe who has been with the company for longer than six months shall receive two weeks' vacation with pay.

Film Writer Gets Real Assignment.

Britt Creig, secretary of the Screen Club, has been assigned by his paper, "The Constitution," to gather the news from the Fifth Georgia Regiment, and is now at Camp Harris. The Fifth is indeed fortunate in having this able newspaper man assigned it. Mr. Creig is well known among exchangemen and exhibitors over the South, being editor of the Constitution's moving picture section.

Theater Benefit for Georgia Soldiers.

The Piedmont theater was crowded all day Sunday at a special benefit given by William Oldknow for Atlanta's own, the Fifth Georgia Regiment. A special collection was taken at the door, which will go to the fund being raised to look after the comfort of the privates of the regiment.

As if Joe Ever Was Unhappy!

Joe Marientette, manager of the World Film Corporation here, is the happiest manager in Georgia, giving as his reason that Kitty Gordon has signed with his company for three more years, and will appear exclusively in its features.

"Bill" Oldknow Again on the Job.

When it comes to getting the film men together, William Oldknow, president of the Screen Club, is the man to do it. It is estimated that fully 98 per cent. of the film men of Atlanta were in the parade July 4, and this large attendance was due in a great measure to the efforts of Mr. Oldknow.

Atlanta News Miscellany.

Eugene Wilder, president of the Automatic Player Piano Company, has returned from Chicago, where he attended the national piano convention.

A. C. Bromberg, of the Triangle, has returned from a trip to Florida, which he made in his automobile.

C. E. Daffin, proprietor of the Daffin theaters in Tallahassee and other Florida cities, is in Atlanta for a short stay. He is one of the most successful exhibitors in the South, and is a general favorite with motion picture men.

William Sharp, of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, is in Tennessee for a short business trip.

L. S. Levine, district manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is in Atlanta for a stay of several weeks.

Carl W. Rountree, president of the Scenic Film Company, has returned from a trip east, where he went with the Ad Men. He visited the studios in New York and New Jersey while on the trip.

EXHIBITORS DENY CHARGES.

Three Indicted New Jersey Owners in Kearny Deny Disregard of Minor Laws —Newspapers Color Stories.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 142 Market Street, Newark.

THE ire of all well-thinking men and women in Kearny, N. J., has been aroused by stories printed in Newark newspapers regarding alleged disregard of the laws relating to the admission of minors in the moving picture houses of the town. True enough is the statement that three Kearny residents are implicated in the indictment proceedings brought by the Hudson County grand jury, but when the papers began to print a lot of "rot" concerning alleged crimes that were said to have occurred in the show houses, the exhibitors naturally were aroused. The three indicted picture owners are Mrs. Augusta C. Treat, lessee of the Grand theater; John Wilson, lessee of the Casino theater, and James Durkin, who holds the lease of the Regent theater. Neither of the men has any connection with the latter two theaters expect to hold the licenses.

So colorful were the published reports of the conditions existing in West Hudson that the Newark representative could not forbear to make a special investigation to find out what the real conditions in Kearny were. Speaking of suggestive films, a Newark Sunday paper had written: "The films which attracted most attention in this respect were 'Where Are My Children?' and 'Damaged Goods.' The Moving Picture World's correspondent found out direct from the three implicated exhibitors that they had never exhibited either of the alleged objectionable pictures, and moreover they had not even booked them for some future date.

But listen to this: "Early this vear County Judges Mark M. Sullivan and George G. Tenant were forced to listen to revolting stories told by little girls who had been lured into the 'movies' by men. The crimes which were committed in some of the theaters were so serious that the convicted men are now serving from twenty to thirty years in State's prison." Eugene E. Couquet, manager of the Regent theater, said: "I do not cater to that class of people. So far as I am concerned no crimes of any nature were ever committed in my house." Frank L. Doyle, manager of the Casino, also denied the charges that men and women of ill-repute patronized his place. Both Mrs. Treat, the lessee, and Charles Hedberg, the manager, also vehemently denied the charges. "On the contrary," said Mrs. Treat in the interview with the representative of the Moving Picture World, "we cater especially to the high-class people of Kearny. Our patrons are refined and well behaved. We have fought for years to keep the children out of the playhouses, but what can we do? A child stands on the corner and finally some passer-by takes him in. I cannot ask each person individually whether the child with him is his own. It is not reasonable, not fair and not to be expected from theater owners."

As far as cleanliness, exits and equipment are concerned the Kearny theaters are thoroughly equipped. Only recently the owners of the various playhouses had to install fire escapes leading from the balconies. As another precaution it was deemed necessary to have two special policemen, not one, at each theater. So now we see Messrs. Hedberg, Couquet and Doyle polishing up their "tin" badges. Other precautions making it absolutely safe in the theaters have been taken.

The hearing takes place July 24.

IOWA NEWS LETTER.

Des Moines.—There was no state fund for the purpose, but it was decided to make 6,000 feet of film showing the mobilization of the Iowa troops for preservation in historical records. The project was financed by renting the film until the expenses were paid. Curator Harlan of the State Historical Society has had requests for booking from all over the state.

Davenport.—An appropriate feature was "Martyrs of the Alamo," which Manager Rosenholz of the American theater selected for a two-day run to help the dependents of the members of Battery B, Iowa National Guard.

Muscatine.—Charles W. Kemble, first manager of the Grand Opera House when it was opened fifteen years ago, has taken a lease on that theater.

Waverly.—Arthur Earl, formerly of the Palace theater here, has accepted a position at the Crystal theater in Waterloo.

Griswold.—R. W. Black, of Dexter, has purchased the moving picture theater here from C. H. Kramer.

Exira.—George McNary, of this place, has purchased a moving picture theater in Griswold, Ia.

NOTES FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

From Philadelphia News Service, 326 Real Estate Trust Bldg., Philadelphia.

CARR & SCHAD, well-known exhibitors of Reading, Pa., have recently announced their intention of devoting the entire receipts of one afternoon's performance in the Princess theater for the clubhouse fund of the Women's Club. This performance will be given during the last week in July.

Alfred Kohl, 238 West Erie avenue, Philadelphia, well known in local moving picture circles as a former machine operator for the State Board of Censors, was recently appointed a State factory inspector at a salary of $1,500 per year.

A building permit has been granted by Inspector Minner, of Allentown, to S. S. Horn, contractor, calling for the erection of a three-story brick addition to the Orpheum theater at Sixth and Linden streets. The addition will be 37 by 66 feet and will cost approximately $15,000.

The France Films Company, Inc., has recently been granted a charter under the laws of the state of New Jersey for the purpose of conducting a general moving picture film exchange. The new concern has been capitalized at $125,000, James M. Burke, E. S. Quay and C. B. Collins, all of Chicago, being the principal incorporators.

The Kansas City Feature Film Company, of Kansas City, Mo., has recently been incorporated under the laws of the state of New Jersey for the purpose of producing film plays. The company has been capitalized at $100,000.

NORTH CAROLINA NOTES.

Asheville.—When the delegates to the Southern Forestry Congress were in town recently they were the guests of S. A. Lynch at a number of exhibitions of motion picture films of subjects in which they were interested. The reels were furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture. The foresters deeply appreciated the courtesy of Mr. Lynch.

Charlotte.—An agreement has recently been reached between R. D. Craver and H. L. and C. E. Morrow whereby the partnership heretofore existing between them in the management and operation of the Piedmont and Broadway theaters has been dissolved. Hereafter, Mr. Craver will control the Broadway theater exclusively, while the Morrow Brothers will own and operate the Piedmont theater.

Asheville.—H. L. Vreeland, who has been staying at the Battery Park Hotel in this city, is announcing that the Viking Film Company, of New York, will, in the near future, open a studio in Asheville and is advertising the sale of stock in the organization. He says local talent will be given an opportunity to appear in Viking productions, once the organization is established in Asheville. According to Mr. Vreeland, who is the business manager, a company of twenty-eight players are at work on a five-reel film. Frank Lea Short will be assistant director and Eustace H. Ball literary director. Clarence Schottenfels will be in charge of the releasing and distribution of their productions.

Wilmington.—A new $4,000 Seeburg pipe organ and orchestra, embodying the very latest improvements in organs of this type, has just been installed at the Bijou theater, where it is proving a great attraction.

NEW THEATER FOR MARBLEHEAD.

Company Has Been Incorporated in Massachusetts Coast Town to Build the Warwick, with 1,000 Seats.

MARBLEHEAD, the well-known Massachusetts coast town, is to have another motion picture show house. It is to be named the Warwick Theater. The company that will build it took out incorporation papers under Massachusetts laws last week. The incorporators were W. L. Terhune, Everit B. Terhune, W. M. Bunting, Clarence H. Holloway, Greely S. Curtis, Herbert Humphrey, Nathaniel C. Lyon, W. C. Gregory, B. W. Hobart, H. J. Adams, Samuel Schuman, Calvin Tilden, Arthur W. Huguley, Mrs. Nellie C. Huguley, D. B. H. Power, Charles W. Conklin and Richard W. Drown.

All but two of these live in Marblehead and the Phillips Beach section. The officers of the corporation are Greely S. Curtis, president; W. L. Terhune, treasurer; Calvin Tilden, clerk, with W. L. Terhune, Greely S. Curtis, Samuel Shuman, B. W. Hobart, Nathaniel C. Lyon, Herbert Humphrey and W. M. Bunting as directors. The business management of the enterprise will be intrusted to W. L. Terhune, who will bring into the combination his long experience as an executive, while the producing management will be in the hands of R. W. Drown, who will give the organization the benefit of his wide connection with a chain of successful houses of which he is part owner.

The site of the theater is on Pleasant street, on a lot containing 13,698 square feet. It will be built of stucco with possibly a brick front. The foyer will be about twenty feet square, the street or sidewalk front covered with a marquise. Each side of the foyer will be an attractive store, modern in style with full up-to-date plate glass fronts.

The auditorium will be about 49x100, and 23 feet high, with a seating capacity of nearly 1,000. The walls will be rough plastered with pilasters and the whole neatly decorated with a combination of colors that will be quiet in tone yet artistic. The heating, ventilating and plumbing will be modern and scientific and has already been approved by the state board of inspection. The stage will have an opening of 26 feet, depth 15 feet, and 17 feet high, all inclosed with a handsome plush curtain.

The stage setting will be similiar in type to the latest New York houses of this character, but not on so large a scale.

The pit in front of the stage will be built so an organ can be installed at any time, and this is the present intention of the management. The exits are so arranged that the entire house can be emptied in three minutes. Modern up-to-date folding chairs will be installed.

Brady Pictures Strong in Cleveland.

Cleveland. — "Brady-made productions have stimulated business in this territory to an unbelievable extent," P. A. Bloch, manager of the World Film Company exchange here, says. "Business has made phenomenal strides for us," Bloch adds, "greater than we had ever dreamed of."

Mrs. Jones Subleases Unique.

Waukesha, Wis.—Mrs. H. A. Jones, manager of the Colonial theater and former manager of the Park theater, has subleased the Unique theater on Main street and will operate both houses.

BALTIMORE NEWS LETTER.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mount Royal Terrace, Baltimore.

Child Labor Law to Be Enforced.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Among the number of important orders which have been issued by Marshall John C. Cockey of the Baltimore county police force, to his men, is one concerning the Maryland Child Labor Law, which might affect the vaudeville and moving picture theaters in this section of the state.

In regard to this law, Marshall Cockey will see to it that parties will be prohibited from the employment of children under 16 years of age on the stage or in pool and billiard rooms; also prohibiting children under 18 years of age from appearing in any theater, concert hall, club or other place of amusement where intoxicating liquors are sold.

Pictures Again at Ford's.

Ford's Opera House again opened its doors with moving pictures on Monday, July 10. The feature was "How England Prepared." It is also announced that the W. H. Clune production of "Ramona" will be shown at this theater in the early part of August. A special orchestra has been engaged.

Pearl White Visits Theaters.

Last week was visiting week for Pearl White, the star of the Pathe company which visited Baltimore for about ten days in order to secure suitable atmosphere for a production now in the making. On Monday night, July 10, Miss White, accompanied by Hal Forde, Lila Leslie, Ethel Temple, John Coleman, Del Boone and the Misses Abbott and Day, were guests of Dr. F. W. Schanze at his large theater at Pennsylvania and North avenues. Thousands were there to welcome the players. This is of double interest to the people of Baltimore inasmuch as Dr. Schanze gave a percentage of the receipts which he took in last week for several charity funds and institutions.

On Tuesday night the players were guests of Thomas F. Goldberg, at the Goldberg theater, 3117-19 West North avenue.

Comedy to Sell Clothes—Perhaps.

Harry Lewy, the Baltimore cameraman, is now preparing a one-reel comedy for a Baltimore clothing manufacturer which will be used for advertising purposes. Arrangements will be made, it is said, with the largest theater manager in a town to run the film as part of his program and then invitations will be sent out to all prospective customers to attend. The film is made in such a way as to introduce the line of fabrics and styles being sold. After the screening the salesman will state his proposition.

"Shoes" Scores Hit.

J. Blechman, manager of the Picture Garden theater, 31 West Lexington street, says the Bluebird feature "Shoes" had such pulling powers that he decided to run it on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

"Secret of the Submarine" Liked.

Since the arrival in Baltimore of the merchant submarine Deutschland from Germany, it is reported at the Mutual exchange that "The Secret of the Submarine" is being clamored for by many exhibitors.

G. L. Wonders on Elks Committee.

Guy L. Wonders, President of the Maryland Exhibitors League and manager of the Wilson theater, 418 East Baltimore street, was a busy man during the Elks' convention. Wonders was chairman of the committee on entertainment of the women visitors.

In the State of Maryland.

Frederick—F. Lester Smith, manager and part owner of the Empire theater of this city, has answered the call to the colors and is now on the Mexican border.

Lonaconing—It is reported by Evans Brothers, who operate the San Toy theater and the Opera House, that they expect to remain open throughout the summer.

Ground Broken for Milo Studio.

Ground was broken for the new outdoor studio of the Milo Pictures Corporation, at the corner of Frederick road and Van Bibber avenue, July 10 on the lot 50 by 400 feet, beautifully located near Gwynns Falls Park. A large stage measuring 50 by 75 feet is to be erected first. The present executive of the company are now located at 356 North Gay street.

START WORK ON BUTTE HOUSE.

Grombacher & Bailey Will Have 1,200-Seat Theater in Montana City.

BUTTE, Mont.—Grombacher & Bailey have commenced excavation for their new theater to be erected on West Park street, near Main. The house will seat 1,200 and will be first class in every respect. It is within a few doors of the site of the proposed Jensen & Von Herberg theater. Construction on the latter house has not yet commenced.

Indications are that Montana will go dry this coming election. This sentiment comes from people who would be the least expected to advocate prohibition. They claim that since several of the western states have gone dry many undesirables who follow in the wake of demon rum have flocked to Montana as the last frontier and its reliable citizens are compelled to favor prohibition for their own protection.

Chattanooga Threatens Censorship

Following Letters of Protest Against Some of the Pictures Being Shown, Mayor of City Declares Action Probably Will Be Taken by Council.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Louisville.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—Stating that a number of motion pictures have recently been exhibited here of a decidedly immoral character, that children of all ages are permitted to see them without restrictions of any kind, and that such pictures are demoralizing in their nature and injurious to the public welfare, Mayor Jesse M. Littleton has stated that immediate action will probably be taken by the City Commission to maintain a more rigid censorship of moving pictures.

Mayor Littleton stated that he had received a great many letters protesting against some of the films recently exhibited in Chattanooga, and a short time ago a communication from the Women's Council was read before the commission requesting that some action be taken.

In the event of the establishment of the board, as advocated by the Mayor, it is the intention of Chattanooga film men to appeal to the Commission with a view of having such board consist of men who are used to judging matters from an all-around standpoint, and who take a liberal minded vision of an important question.

Motion Pictures Supplant Vaudeville.

Nashville.—Effective July 10, the Princess theater of this city was converted from a vaudeville house into one of the largest and most beautifully appointed photoplay houses in the entire South. A thorough renovation was under gone throughout, the stage decorations being especially noteworthy. New projection machinery has been installed, and the stage transformed into an Italian garden, from the center of which springs an electric fountain. Softly shaded lamps have been placed at advantageous points throughout the auditorium, and the ventilating system is practically perfect.

The Princess has been a vaudeville house for a number of years and has a seating capacity of fifteen hundred. Only the best pictures will be exhibited, the eight-reel Vitagraph, "God's Country and the Woman," having been selected for the opening program. The house does not open until 1 p. m., prices for all seats being 10 cents for matinees and 15 cents for evening performances.

Manager Harry Sudekum has seen to it that the musical feature is well taken care of, an orchestra of fifteen pieces having been provided under the new arrangement.

Pictures at Mountain Resort.

Monteagle.—Moving pictures were shown for the first time on July 6 at the assembly grounds, the opening program featuring the Selig Red Seal special, "The Rosary." This marks the beginning of a series of exhibitions to be given during the two months' Chautauqua season.

Exchange Men Accompany Feature.

Memphis.—Three representatives of the People's Feature Film Company of this city, Julian Rothschild, A. J. Hiller and A. H. Gross, are out on a nine months' trip with the California Motion Picture Corporation's seven-reel Beatriz Michelena feature, 'The Unwritten Law." The picture was shown at Nashville during Fourth of July week, at which place the Strand theater engaged a special orchestra to furnish the musical accompaniment. From there it was carried to Franklin, Columbia and other points in the state.

Raise Prices for War Feature.

Memphis.—Prices at the Lyceum were raised to 25 and 50 cents for night performances and 25 cents for matinees during the run of the big Urban war picture, "How Britain Prepared." The management booked the picture for a solid week and the attendance held up throughout the entire run with advanced admission. All seats were reserved.

Open Air Pictures at Zoo.

Nashville.—The open-air pictures at Glendale Zoo are drawing large crowds, which are entertained with music from a thirty-piece band. The Casino theater, formerly used as the Glendale motion picture house, has been converted into a minstrel show during the run of the open-air films.

Soldiers Have Big Night.

Nashville.—A picked squad of men from the First Tennessee Field Hospital Corps, encamped at the mobilization grounds, enjoyed a free trip to Nashville on the evening of July 5, and were entertained by Harry Sudekum of the Princess.

Tennessee Topics.

Nashville.—W. H. Wassman, Nashville's pioneer exhibitor, known throughout the South as "The Man Who Made the Nickel Famous," is back in the city after a several days' trip.

It is rumored that the Orpheum, which has been dark for some time, will reopen shortly as a picture house.

Knoxville.—Moving pictures are being shown at Chilhowee Park.

Nashville.—Manager Ira Lusky is putting on second run Triangle features at the Star theater, a negro house.

THE MOST "TIMELY" FILM EVER PRODUCED!

Scenes never before allowed to be shown. Exactly what every American wants to see. How do we build an Army? Why do we need one? Where do we get the men and equipment? Is preparedness up to the Army or to Congress? What have we done with the millions of dollars? What happens to a man after he enlists? How can a private soldier get to West Point? If War was declared tomorrow would you have to enlist? All these questions clearly pictured.

ESSANAY.

A BROTHER'S LOYALTY—(Two Parts—July 25).—The cast: Paul, the minister (Francis X. Bushman); Hal's wife (Beverly Bayne); the detective (E. H. Calvert).

Hal neglects his wife and small child, having fallen in with an idle crowd in a cheap pool hall. Counterfeit bills are prevalent around the pool room and Hal gets one and unwittingly passes it. The detective finds him at the home of his brother, Paul. The minister before the detective arrives persuades the brother to change identities for the sake of his family. Thus Paul is sent to prison. Hal takes his place as the preacher and goes into the pool hall distributing religious leaflets. By accident he discovers the counterfeiting plant in the basement and the detective and several policemen raid it. Hal reveals his identity and his brother is pardoned. Thereafter Hal and his wife are among Paul's most devout parishioners.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 13 (July 26). Canimated Nooz is able to announce with this issue that it has obtained the services of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Shanty to demonstrate the new dances on the screen. "Walking the bow-wows" is the dance offered an anxious public. "Get a hammerlock on your partner, a little wicked music and the rest is simple," Mr. Vernon Shanty declares. Dreamy Dud takes his boss, Carlson, into his confidence this time and permits him to share honors on the screen. The cartoonist appears drawing his famous figures, who perform on his drawing board instead of full screen. Canimated Nooz shares a reel with Western scenic.

REPENTANCE—(Three Parts—July 29).—The cast: Arthur Bennett (John Lorenz); Helen Neal (Anne Leigh).

Helen Neal will not believe in God. Arthur Bennett, studying for missionary work, is a boarder at the Neal home. He loves the girl and she loves him. But he gives her up when she refuses to believe. He gets an assignment to India. The girl realizes that her disbelief has caused her to lose him. After many months an epidemic of disease breaks out in her home town. Instead of fleeing she stays and nurses the sick. Exhausted by her constant labor she is called upon to nurse Arthur Bennett's mother.

In the meantime Bennett has been through just such experiences in India. He catches the disease himself and after recovering returns home to rest. Just as the girl has nursed his mother back to health he arrives. He finds that through all the suffering she has witnessed she has returned to his faith and no further obstacles confront the two.

KALEM.

BLACK MAGIC (No. 15 of "The Social Pirates"—Two Parts—July 3).—The cast: Mona (Marin Sais); Mary (Ollie Kirkby); Carson (E. Forrest Taylor); Grant (Ronald Bradbury); Rulu, the mystic (Rupert Dell); Wallace (Frank Jonasson); Mrs. Wallace (Helen Selbie); the detective (Edward Clisbee).

Rulu, a crafty mystic, holds the banker's wife, Mrs. Wallace, under the spell of his hypnotic power. While in this unknowing state she aids him to rob her husband's safe. Mona and Mary learn of her plight and determine to aid her. Mona attends one of Rulu's seances, and seems deeply impressed. Later she tells Rulu that she is a ward of Mr. Wallace, and that she fears she is being defrauded of her inheritance.

With the aid of Carson and Grant, the admirers of Mona and Mary, who have helped them in the past, a trap is laid for Rulu into which he walks eagerly. By skillfully arranging events the girls succeed in securing the return of the stolen money and the exposure of Rulu. The closing scene finds, two happy couples looking forward to a more serene future than has been the lot of Mona and Mary in their crusade against social vultures.

THE PEACH PICKERS (July 4).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); "Big Bill" (A. Edmondson); his wife (Eileen Godsey); the fly cop (Freddie Fraelick).

"If you fellows are caught flirting once more I'll give you ten years making little ones out of big ones," the judge tells Ham and Bud as the picture starts. But no sooner do the doors of the jail open than the two start on their career again. In the park they run afoul of "Big Bill," as husky as his name, when they grow too attentive to his wife, Eileen. "Big Bill," after wreaking his vengeance on them, reports to the police and, Freddie, disguised as a very attractive maiden, is sent on the trail of Ham and Bud. Events work up to as lively a finish as any Ham comedy has ever boasted with a rapid-fire chase by boat in which Ham and Bud succeed in eluding their pursuers.

THE PSYCHIC PHENOMENON (July 7).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Nobody Home, the butler (Henry Murdock); Prof. Spark Plug (C. D. Peruchi); I. B. Overwork (Richard Purdon); his wife (Olive West); Miss Overwork (Mary Kennedy); Overwork's clerk (Arthur Albertson). Produced by Robert Ellis.

Sis is deeply impressed by the lecture of Prof. Spark Plug, the hypnotist, and she prevails on her butler admirer to purchase a copy of the professor's book, "The Power of the Eye." Sis practices before her mirror in the Overwork home, where she is maid, until she decides that she is some "hipponotist." Her employer, I. B. Overwork, has finally given way under the strain and returns home at mid-day to rest. He mixes a much-needed sleep potion for himself and after sipping of it sits down to rest.

Sis enters and tries out her hypnotic ability. The sleeping potion gets in its work about the same time and Overwork goes off to the land of dreams. The overcurious butler sips a little of the sleep potion as he listens to Sis's boasting of her ability and when she shows how she did it he too falls in a trance. It's a great day for Sis until she discovers that she can't wake the pair up and then there is a great commotion before matters are straightened out.

TO SAVE THE ROAD (No 87 of the "Hazards of Helen"—July 8).—The cast: Helen (Helen Gibson); Senator Brown (G. A. Williams); road superintendent (P. S. Pembroke). Written by Homer Eon Flindt. Produced by James Davis.

The vote stands a tie on the railroad bill that will mean ruin to the Western line should it pass the State Legislature. By getting Senator Brown, who is aboard a liner quarantined in the bay, to the Capitol the day will be saved. The road superintendent takes a daring chance and aboard a motor boat succeeds in smuggling the Senator ashore and to a Western special which speeds off towards the Capitol of the neighboring State. The rival corporation wires ahead to the sheriff to stop the train at Lone Point and arrest the Senator for breaking quarantine.

Helen foils the plan and the special shoots ahead, but the sheriff and his deputy climb aboard another engine in pursuit. By taking a short cut across the hills in an auto Helen succeeds in getting aboard the Senator's special with an important message telling of the relay special that is waiting for him just across the State line. As they near the line of safety the sheriff overtakes them. With his deputy the officer climbs down on the cowcatcher to jump aboard the Senator's special.

Helen conceives a daring plan and quickly puts it into execution. She climbs to the top of the engine cap and jumps to the guide ropes swung across the track, a second later dropping to the cab of the pursuing engine. In another minute she is at the throttle backing the engine up while the sheriff sees his quarry speeding across the State line to safety.

THE BAGGAGE SMASHERS (July 11).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); the telegrapher (Eileen Godsey); the flagman (Freddie Fraelick); Bad Bill (A. Edmondson).

The wild romance of Ham and Bud, hardened men of the road who arrive in the frontier village, and, touched by the beauty of the telegrapher, actually consent to take a job. They become official baggage smashers at the station. It isn't a cinch of a job with a gun-toting mad man roaring around and a pesty sheriff who has received word that there is a large reward out for the capture of Ham and Bud. They lead an exciting life with one mishap after another until they finally climb aboard another freight and leave town by the same means they entered.

THE QUACK QUAKERS (July 12).—The cast: Flo (Ethel Teare); Peter Pinkham (H. L. Davenport); Ezra Pinkham (Gus Leonard); Tom (Victor Rottman); Bennet (G. Hopkins). Written by Samuel J. Taylor. Directed by Harry Millarde.

Peter Pinkham and his daughter, Flo, are a gay pair, living a frolicsome life. Tom, of the Peaches and Cream Musical Comedy Company, sees Flo at the beach and decides then and there that she would be a wonderful acquisition for the stage. He learns her address and by his glowing description induces the manager of the show to accompany him to her house. Before he arrives, however, Peter, and his daughter have received word that Ezra, their wealthy Quaker uncle, is coming to visit them and "hopes to see you living the peaceful Quaker life."

Peter and Flo immediately don the sombre garb and daring statuary and playing cards are hidden from view. When Tom and the manager enter they find, not the pretty and gay Flo of the beach, but a sombre unattractive maiden. The manager voices his vigorous disappointment and leaves in a rush. Ezra arrives to find the personal appearance of his cousins satisfactory, though he is a bit uneasy over finding of a playing card, a liquor decanter, and the discovery of the daring art objects.

Tom, smitten with Flo's charms, returns in Quaker costume, determined to go the limit to win her. But he is surprised to meet Flo once more in gay array, for when the elder men temporarily left the room she determined to visit the manager herself. More complications follow, and life from then on is a quick change of clothes and temperament back and forth for Flo before Tom and Ezra prevail on father to allow Tom to marry her that he might teach her to mend her ways and be more dignified and sedate.

THE WISHING RING (July 14).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Uncle Jerry (Richard Purdon); T. Jeremiah Spinach (Henry Murdock); Detective Slick (Arthur Albertson); Widow Simpson (Olive West); her daughter (Francis Nemoyer); the village smithy (C. D. Peruchi). Written by Frank Howard Clark. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Reading romantic novels has Sis dreaming of soul mates and dauntless heroes. So, when the village smithy makes her a nail ring and says that she shall have three wishes, she turns down his proffered love and wanders off in the fields to read her novel. "Gee," she sighs, "I wish I had a soul mate!" And, lo and behold, T. Jeremiah Spinach drops from the air at her knees. Sis does not know that T. Jeremiah, otherwise known as Rogue's Gallery No. 1, was escaping from a detective and had involuntarily fallen down the embankment. The pursuing detective and the rivalry of the village smithy bring on complications galore before T. Jeremiah is finally walked off to justice and Sis finds consolation in the huge reward given her for his capture and the love of the smithy.

THE BROKEN BRAKE (No. 88 of the "Hazards of Helen"—July 15).—The cast: Helen, the operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Johnson, construction foreman (George Routh); his assistant (P. S. Pembroke); the doctor (G. A. Wiliams). Written by E. W. Matlack. Produced by James Davis.

In a scuffle between the assistant foreman and a discharged employee at the mountain construction camp the latter's revolver is fired, bringing about a dynamite explosion that severely injures many of the men. The crude medical aid of the camp will not suffice so the foreman and his assistant determine on the dangerous expedient of loading the men on a freight car and coasting down the grade to the Lone Point station. After word is sent ahead to Helen to secure surgeons from headquarters the start is made. When the car is hurtling along at great speed the foreman and assistant suddenly discover that the brakes will not work.

The assistant leaps to the ground, and, though badly hurt, succeeds in getting word ahead by tapping a wire. With the special bearing the medical staff rushing towards the station Helen's bravery and quick wit are put to a stern test in averting almost certain disaster. An audacious leap from horseback to a freight train and back again, and the manipulation of flying switches that shows the trains missing collision by a matter of inches form the thrilling climax of this "Hazard."

LUBIN.

OTTO, THE SALESMAN (July 24).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don); Mary (Patsy De Forest); foreman (Bernard Siegel); floorwalker (George Egan). Written by Mark Jonak. Adapted and directed by Edwin McKim.

He was only a hard-working ribbon clerk, but he had a heart. Each morning after taking his exercise at an open window in his attic room (which consisted of twelve deep breatbs) he would go to toil in a department store. He gazed at Mary, a shop girl, and for many days he loved her devotedly. But a villainous foreman comes into the plot. The foreman asks Mary to come to his office after six o'clock. Otto overhears and decides to disguise himself as a bunch of ribbon behind the counter. The working people are leaving for their homes. Mary is in the foreman's office; he is telling her of the pretty future there would he for her if she would only care for him. She refuses and leaves. Otto rushes out to the front door, tells Mary he has heard all, begs her to become his other half. She remarks, "When you have proven to me that you are really a man, I will marry you. Until then, suffer." With this remark Otto faints.

Next morning Otto is all dressed up. When she gets a look at him, Mary is thrilled. The foreman after many attempts finally plans to meet Mary at the bridge near the river at twelve. He tells her it is important and means everything. Mary is seen on the bridge. The villainous foreman walks up to her; they speak for awhile. He offers her large diamonds of all descriptions, but she refuses them. Then he plans to carry her off. He suddenly blows a whistle and on come his confederates. They are about to take her away when Otto makes his appearance; he stops them with a huge gun. He gives Mary the gun, tells her to hold the assistants at bay while he goes over to the foreman, slaps him in the face, and offers him a choice of swords. They start fighting the duel while Mary is keeping back the thugs. Otto backs the foreman right into the river, then he goes to the thugs, and throws them into the river, too. Mary holds her arms out and makes Otto her hero.

BY RIGHT OF LOVE (Two Parts—July 25).—The cast: Muriel Fulton (Velma Whitman); Dan Moulton (Jay Morely); Manager Farrel (Robert Gray); Mr. Fulton (Melvin Mayo); Katie (Marcia Moore). Written by C. J. Harris. Directed by Leon D. Kent.

Muriel, daughter of Fulton, a wealthy manufacturer, imagines herself in love with Farrel, manager of the works, though in reality she is more dominated than attracted by him. Farrel has usurped authority at the plant, and insists upon a cut in wages of the men. Dan Moulton, one of the workmen, living with his invalid sister, Katie, incurs Farrel's enmity, but, nevertheless, takes the part of the men in opposing the cut. During a ball at Fulton's home, Dan presents his plea to the manufacturer, pointing out that the wages of the poor should not be reduced so long as Fulton has money to spend on entertainments. His arrival interrupts Farrel in a proposal to Muriel just as she is about to accept him. When the girl hears Dan's masterly plea, and listens to his accusations of Farrel, she sees the vast difference between the two men, and delays her acceptance of the superintendent. She takes Dan's part, and wins the cause of the men.

Katie, Dan's sister, wins a prize at the state fair for needle work, and when Muriel at length yields to Farrel's pleading and consent to marriage, she goes to Katie with her wedding dress to have the girl embroider it. Katie's eyesight is failing, and Dan has forbidden her to work, but at the sight of the money which Muriel offers, Katie consents, and works on the dress in secret. Farrel, to make good his hold on Fulton, bribes a city official, but contrives to make it appear that Fulton is the briber. As the wedding day approaches, Muriel wavers in her decision to wed, but Farrel threatens exposure of her father in the matter of the bribe, and she again consents. Katie is finishing her work, but is discovered by Dan, who takes away her lamp. She gets a candle and continues her sewing. The dress is finished just as the candle fades, but when Dan enters he finds the girl blind. He learns that the dress is for Muriel, and is fierce in his realization that again the wealthy have taken toll from the poor.

The next day Muriel and Farrel go to Katie for the dress. There they meet Dan, and Muriel is heartbroken when she learns of the girl's misfortune. She pleads to be allowed to aid her, but Dan hands her the dress and the money she has paid his sister, and drives both Muriel and Farrel from the house. As a result of Dan's acting in ejecting Farrel, he is arrested for assault, and Fulton is arrested on the discovery of the bribe. It seems to Farrel that his triumph is complete. He is about to marry Muriel, and with the father in prison, he will be in complete charge of the factory. The shock is too great for the feeble Fulton, and he dies.

Dan, released on bail, meets Muriel, but refuses her request to be allowed to help Katie. Muriel has become distrustful of Farrel and declares that she will take a trip to Europe before the wedding. She carefully gives the appearance of going, but sends her maid instead, and disguised as her own maid, she keeps close watch on Farrel. Feigning interest in charity, she visits his office, veiled, and learns his true character. She succeeds in getting Katie into a hospital, also engages Dan to work on the Fulton place, posing before him as the maid. Believing her to be in as lowly a position as himself, Dan does not hesitate to show his love for her. Katie is brought home, and when the bandages are removed, it is she who tells Dan the real identity of the supposed maid. Muriel returns home with Dan, and finds Farrel. When he asks by what right the discharged worker is permitted on the place, she replies: "By right of love. He is the new superintendent of the factory and my prospective husband."

IN THE HOUR OF DISASTER (Three Parts—July 27).—The cast: James Gordon (Romaine Fielding); Mrs. Jordon (Mildred Gregory); Nell Rudge (Flora Lea); Nell's father (Bernard Siegel). Written and directed by Romaine Fielding.

James Gordon, a physician and surgeon, adopts Nell Rudge, the daughter of a shiftless laborer. The girl is sent to a boarding school and at the close of her last term, Gordon marries a society girl. Upon Nell's return from school, Gordon's fatherly interest in the girl is misconstrued by the wife, who is insanely jealous. Danby, an artist, who has rented from Gordon the adjoining country house, meets Nell and falls in love with her. Gordon's many attentions to Nell kindle the flame of jealousy in his wife and she orders Nell from the house. Nell's shiftless father, now a railroad employe, is discharged for drunkenness, and on the day Nell leaves home he and another discharged laborer rob the switch tower guard after having bound and gagged him. The train upon which Nell leaves meets with a head-on collision with a freight train, due to the tower guard. Gordon's wife, remorseful for her action in driving Nell away, seeks to intercept the train in an automobile, but she is too late to prevent the accident. Searching the ruins for Nell's body, she is frightfully burned. Nell is taken to the hospital and Gordon saves her life as well as that of his wife's. A reconciliation is effected, and wedding bells ring for Nell and Danby.

IT HAPPENED IN PIKERSVILLE (July 29). The cast: Exhausted Eddy (Raymond McKee); Spent Spencer (C. W. Ritchie); Vimless Victor (Billy Bowers); chief of police (Harry Loraine); Jiggs (Babe Hardy); Julia (Mabel Paige); janitor (Ben Walker); a policeman (Burt Bucher). Written by Fred H. Hayn. Directed by Jerod T. Hevener.

Sunday morning, Spent Spencer, Exhausted Eddy and Vimless Victor, three tramps, steal a bottle of whiskey from the box on the window sill of the home of Jiggs, owner of a distillery. But the box is knocked off and the other bottles are broken. Julia, Jiggs' wife, hears the crash and goes after the tramps with the broom. She calls Jiggs, but when he arrives the tramps have escaped. The tramps celebrate, but they attract the attention of a cop, who blows his whistle for assistance. The cops give chase and Victor and Spencer are caught, but Eddy, after being shot in the back, escapes by hiding in an ash barrel. The two are locked up and Eddy finds his way to Jiggs' distillery, next door to the police station.

In the distillery Eddy comes on a find, but desirous of letting his pals in, he calls to them to look out of the window, over the roof and down in front of the cell window, then, after he has filled himself up, he lies down for a nap. Unfortunately Jiggs and Julia come in to get some papers Jiggs has forgotten. Jiggs investigates as Julia guards Eddy with a pistol. Understanding the situation, Jiggs attaches the hose to the slops vat. In the cell the tramps become hilarious and the police captain sends to learn the cause. The police goes into the cell a moment after Victor has imbibed a generous amount of the slops. He spies the hose and takes a good drink himself.

When Eddy is awakened, Julia recognizes him. She gives him a pummeling and kicks him downstairs, after which the two march him to the police station, where he is thrust in the cell with the others. Angered at the slops the police attacks the tramps, but Eddy locks the cell door and they beat him up. The police calls for help, but the other policeman cannot get in, so they turn the hose on the men to subdue them, but the "cops" get most of the water.

OTTO, THE GARDENER (July 31).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don); Lady Dora (Patsy De Forest); Wm. Kent (George Egan); James Gordon (James Cassady). Written and directed by Edwin McKim.

Otto is a gardener working in the gardens of the lovely and accomplished Lady Dora. Otto is in love with her, but, of course, his station in life forbids him to even speak to her. He sends her flowers, signing "Your Adorer." The Lady is anxious to know who her unknown admirer is.

Lady Dora is much courted, but she will have none of the millionaires who pay her such ardent attention and dismisses their love offerings saying that when she marries she will marry a prince. James Gordon and William Kent, two of her latest admirers, who have been rejected, plan revenge. On being told of the gardener's love for the Lady Dora, they go to him and tell him how easy it is to realize his dreams. They tell him they will furnish him with funds to dress, to buy her presents and then he can marry her.

Otto falls for this, and they dress him as a prince. He is taken into the mansion where he is introduced to Lady Dora. She falls in love with him, and he tells her of his castles, etc.

Then Otto regrets his bargain and goes to the men, saying he is through, but they urge him on by filling his pockets with money. They only await until she finds out he is not a prince. A great reception is held in honor of the prince. He, of course, is funny and he is only found out when his mother, who has learned of his acts, enters the mansion and lets the "cat out of the bag." Otto is kicked out and loses his job.

BIOGRAPH.

A NATURAL BORN GAMBLER—(Two Parts—July 24).

It is the meeting night of "The Amalgamated Calcimine Artists of America" and Hostetter Johnson is busily occupied refilling the gin bottles for the evening rush. The meeting is all ready to proceed when the president notes the absence of an important member—Bert Williams—the walking delegate. Presently Williams makes his entrance in high hat and frock coat. The fact that the meeting is waiting for him does not prevent him from taking his usual "five fingers" at the bar, nor does the fact that he has no money to pay for it make any difference when one can simply call for the slate and chalk it down.

Being duly "oiled up," Williams enters the meeting room and is called to account for back dues. These he pays. After the regular business of the meeting, he consents to carry Limpy Jones, a sufferer of the gout, home. On their way home it is necessary to pass through a graveyard. They hear a couple of chicken thieves dividing their haul say: "Thar's one for you—and one for me," and think it is the devil and the Lord dividing their souls. Limpy Jones is dropped off Wiliams' back, and both run for life. Despite his gout Limpy Jones passes Williams on the road, while the chicken thieves follow later. Williams explains his experience in the graveyard to the thieves, and they tell him of dividing their haul, whereupon Williams explains that he knew it all the time. They all go back to the meeting room, where Limpy Jones is relating his story of the graveyard episode. Williams then suggests that they confiscate the birds in lieu of the fright received.

Still peeved over the money he had to pay as dues, Williams suggests that he and the secretary "roll the bones," and they are well under way when the president comes in and puts an end to it. Later a poker game is started. That, too, is well under way when a guard outside brings the news that a detective is coming in. Chips, cards, money and all other implements of the game are thrown into a drawer, and Williams starts preaching to the meeting on the evils of gambling. He forgets, however, that he had an ace of spades up his sleeve and while emphasizing an important passage in his lecture the card falls to the floor. This is evidence enough for the detective, and he goes for the reserves.

In the meantime the game is again resumed. Luck being against Williams he suggests that Limpy Jones take off the one shoe and have his foot bare—to pass along the aces when needed. They are betting on a big pot, watches, all the chips, money, in fact, everything being in it when the game is raided. The next morning the Judge hands him a ten day sentence.

A SAILOR'S HEART—(Reissue—July 24).—The cast: The sailor (Wilfred Lucas); his first sweetheart (Bess Meredith); his second sweetheart (Blanche Sweet); his third sweetheart (Claire McDowell); notary (Charles H. Mailes); priest (W. Chrystie Miller).

A sweetheart at every port has ever characterized the sailor, but it is believed that the sailor in this comedy carries the tradition a trifle further. Perhaps he was sincere for the moment in his declaration that each girl he met was the first and only, but with a sweetheart at home and one in another port and a wife in still another, fate dealt very kindly with him. He was the victim of his own impulse and paid back in his own coin, went his merry way.

THE BILLIONAIRE (Reissue—3 Parts—July 26).—The cast: Pansy Good (Gertrude Bambrick); John Doe (Charles H. Mailes); Bantiste (Dave Morris); Mr. Peppercorn (Wiliam Sloane); Mrs. Peppercorn (Laura La Varnie); Flora (Isabel Rea); Ping Pong (Bud Ross).

John Doe, "The Billionaire," decides to spend the week-end in Gay Paree and Monte Carlo, and leaves, taking with him Ping Pong, his valet, and a retinue of servants. Mr. and Mrs. Hotspur Peppercorn, newly rich and ambitious to marry their daughter, Flora, to a nobleman, sail on the same ship with Doe. Doe startles Paris with his lavish spending and is eagerly sought. The Peppercorns go to Nice in hopes of mingling with nobility, and Doe takes a trip to Monte Carlo.

Pansy Good, a cabaret singer in Nice, gets in bad and loses her position. At the same time Signor Baptiste, the frappe tenor, finds a photo in his wife's possession, and, determined to find the original, leaves his wife, pleading poverty as an excuse, telling her he cannot see her share his misery. Doe breaks the bank at Monte Carlo and becomes a philanthropist, giving all his winnings to a pretty woman who bas lost heavily and is about to take poison. She gives Doe a card written in French. Curious to know what it means, he asks the waiter to read it. The waiter refers it to the manager, who orders Doe and Ping thrown out. Determined to know what is on the card, Doe saves a life, when he hands it to a stranger who is about to shoot himself. The mysterious card breeds wholesale duelling. The stranger challenges Doe to a duel and leads him to the field of honor.

Doe changes his mind about duelling when he sees the size of the crowd awaiting him, and decides to "beat it." He and Ping make their escape in an airship, and when Ping throws a bomb at his pursuers he loses his balance and falls out. Pansy Good is having a heated argument with the manager of the hotel about her bill when Doe arives. Upon learning of her misfortune he pays her bill. Pansy is grateful and Doe loses his heart.

The Peppercorns meet Lieut. Ladislas, a distinguished Hungarian officer, who takes Mrs. Peppercorn and Flora on a sight seeing tour. Peppercorn plans to entertain the telephone operator that night, and feigns a headache to get away from Mrs. Peppercorn. Doe and Pansy decide to do the town, and in Cafe Chantant Doe is recognized hy Baptiste as the American whose picture he found in his wife's possession. Baptiste vows vengeance and challenges Doe to a duel. Pansy is introduced by Doe as the great American Song Bird and her singing makes a decided hit. Baptiste meets his old friend Lieut. Ladislas, who introduces him to Flora and Mrs. Peppercorn. Mrs. Peppercorn is delighted to meet nobility at last and plans to capture "The Count" for her daughter.

Doe sees the mysterious blonde who gave him the card, but she disappears before he is able to reach her. Doe, Pansy and the Peppercorns attend a contest—Feet vs. Fists, between Mons. Achille Petipas, Savatist (kicker), and Tim Rafferty, an American pugilist. Doe places a big bet on Rafferty and wins. Baptiste pursues Doe. Doe accepts his challenge and engages Tim Rafferty as his bodyguard. Rafferty and Ping, arrayed in armor, meet Baptiste in Doe's apartment. The duel creates a panic in the hotel, and Doe's apartment is demolished. Doe decides to get back to Broadway, and Baptiste, revengeful, plans to follow.

Doe leaves for home with Pansy and Rafferty. Baptiste pays ardent court to Flora, and Mrs. Peppercorn, eager to exhibit the Count, sails for home. Doe announces he will build a theater for his protege and cables his architects in New York to start building a theater at once, and have it ready for him when he arrives. All records for theater building are broken by Doe, and when he reaches New York he announces the opening night. Pansy is billed as the main attraction, and Doe assures her of success. Mrs. Peppercorn, Flora and Baptiste occupy a box, but Peppercorn cludes Mrs. Peppercorn and escorts Fluffy Flash, a show girl.

The Billionaire Theater is opened with pomp and ceremony; Tim Rafferty as head usher is kept busy straightening out arguments with his fists. Mrs. Peppercorn creates a scene when she sees Peppercorn with Fluffy and pulls him out by the ear. Doe's troubles begin when the company refuses to work with a non-union actor. The audience becomes impatient and threatens Doe if he does not open the show. Doe announces to the audience that he will continue the performance and play the leading part himself. He is wildly applauded and with the aid of volunteers the performance is continued.

Doe introduces his latest discovery, Pansy, but she proves a failure, and when a new moon effect he has invented refuses to work, Doe and Pansy are left singing to an audience of two, Rafferty and Ping. Doe, disgusted with his new venture, concludes the performance hy inviting Rafferty and Ping to accompany him to the minister's. Doe again becomes a philanthropist, gives his theater away to a newsboy and marrics his "star."

THE FUR COAT (July 21).—The cast: Harold (William Dangman); Owner of Grocery (George O'Donnell); Village Belle (Shirley Moore); The Tramp (Ralph Whiting). Written by Edward J. Montague. Directed by Frank Currier.

Harold, on the strength of a letter telling him of a large legacy left to him, wrecks the grocery store in which he is employed, then dates up the village belle for a swell dinner. A second letter informs Harold that the money cannot be found, and that his legacy consists of one fur coat. Determined to make a splash in the village, he dons the coat and keeps his appointment with the belle, although it leaves him broke when she is done satisfying her Broadway appetite. Uncle Ben, the pawn broker, comes in handy and after mucb haggling over the price, he relieves Harold of the legacy. When Harold learns that his uncle's fortune was sewed up in the lining of the coat he has some job getting the "benny" back, but he finally succeeds and recovers the cash.

A CHEAP VACATION (July 24). Camp life doesn't agree with Harry and Ralph, two henpecked husbands, but when their wives decide on this style of vacation in order to save expenses, they are forced to go along, and incidentally take all the cumbersome paraphernalia necessary to this enjoyable (?) pastime. The unfortunate hubbys soon see that their lives will not be worth much if they continue camping, so they resort to strategy.

The tramp they hire to make camp life miserable for their wives does bis work thoroughly, and after they find themselves in many embarrassing situations, the women decide that camp life is not what its "cracked up" to be.

A JEALOUS GUY (July 28).—The cast: Brother (Hughey Mack); Wifey (Jewell Hunt); Husband (Billy Baxter); Maid (Yida Ramona); Butler (Ed Dunn). Directed by Lawrence Semon. Written by Lawrence Semon and Graham Baker.

Who said he's dead? The bullet hasn't been invented yet that could pierce the hide of Hughey. While calling on the wife of the most jealous man on earth, Hughey is made the target for a volley of shots from that worthy's revolver. Hubby shoots with telling effect—he has no regard for the high cost of trousers. In the midst of the battle Hughey drops, apparently dead, but as the police nab the murderer the "corpse" starts rolling down stairs carrying all before it. It then gets up, rushes to wifey's room, and nabs a couple of burglars who were stealing a priceless necklace. After the rumpus is over he explains to hubby that he is his brother-in-law, a detective by trade, and hubby requests him to kindly refrain from kissing his wife, as he woud rather have that pleasure reserved for himself.

LIZZIE'S LINGERING LOVE (Three Parts—July 25).—The cast: Jailbird (Alice Howell); Opium Fiend (Phil Dunham); Manager Underworld Den (Fatty Voss); Assistant Manager (Bill Bevan).

Her term was over and she stood on the outside of the prison grasping the few dollars the institution had provided her. She had determined to go straight, but the underworld folks with whom, before her going up, she had rendered service not easily replaced, wanted ber back. Her day of release was chalked by the boss of the den which had been her hangout, and his crooks were there to extend the glad hand. These worthies, posing as friends to the newly liberated, lifted the precious dollars needed for the new start, and the late jailbird found herself under their guidance among her old cronies. The "go straight notion" wasn't entirely killed and tbey found she had lost her former congeniality. Over strenuous efforts on the part of the boss to revive the old spirit drove her to an attempt to end it all.

At tbis point the hero entered, saved her, persuaded her to live a little longer, and won her heart. She stepped blithely forth to start anew, but met up with the underworld folks again and strong arm methods convinced her of the good policy of joining their operations.

She served as an outpost to their burglar jobs with good success, until at a millionaire's home wbere the haul of the season was due for a gathering, she met up with a mouse. This drove her unceremoniously into the privacy of the home, where she found she was aiding in the sacking of the house of her hero.

She turned on her pals, protected the sick mother, returned the family jewels, and then stepped out of his life forever—but being the last one out ran into the lately aroused cops, her exit being badly marred by her efforts to gain headway on the flatfoot hot step of the protectors of peace.

WON BY VALOR (July 27).—The cast: Bertram Marshall (Howard Crampton); Ellen, his daughter (Sydell Dowling); The Groom (Sidney Bracey). Written by Catherine Carr. Produced by Robert F. Hill.

A new groom is engaged by Marshall as an instructor for his daughter, Ellen. Her horse runs away and sbe falls off, whereupon the groom, in picking her up, kisses her. She resents this, but does not tell her father. She is not so averse to being in love with the groom, however, as he is very bandsome and distinguished looking.

Tbe next week tbe Marshalls give a ball. Two crooks gain entrance and are robbing the ladies' dressing room when the groom discovers them and tries to stop them. Ellen enters and fires her tiny revolver at the crowd, wounding the groom. When she sees who it is she accuses him of being an accomplice.

But the groom is recognized as Lord Deering. He says he came disguised as a groom to win Ellen's hand, knowing that she despised titled fortune-bunters. So there is no further obstacle to a happy marriage.

THE CIRCULAR ROOM (Two Parts—July 28).—The cast: Stuart Travers (Ben Wilson); Maida (Edna Hunter); Count Orloff (Charles Ogle); Von Tahn (Joseph W. Girard). Written by William Addison Lathrop. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Stuart Travers, the son of an American steel magnate, falls in love with Maida, the ward of Count Orloff. The count is the head of a league plotting tbe destruction of American munition plants. They hold their meetings in a secret circular room which can be entered only by way of a secret panel. At a meeting of the league there is produced a new type of infernal machine with which they hope to destroy the Travers steel plant.

A certain Von Thahn, one of the league, is also in love with Maida. He proposes and is furious when sbe refuses him. Maida then follows Von Than to the secret room and wbile looking for the spring to open the panel she overhears them plotting the ruin of the Travers steel works.

Wben the plotters leave Maida hides in a closet to escape discovery. Just as Von Tahn, tbe last to leave, is passing tbe closet Maida drops something and is discovered. Von Tahn binds her in the circular room and sets the machine for five minutes past nine. He then leaves and overtakes his confederates. When be tells them what he has done they upbraid him and all return.

Meanwhile, Maida has managed to knock the receiver off the telephone and phones Stuart to come at once. He rushes to the scene with a policeman and just succeeds in getting Maida out in time. He himself is a trifle too late and is knocked unconscious by the explosion. However, Maida finds him still alive, and as the conspirators are arrested there is no obstacle to their happiness.

FOR THE LOVE OF A GIRL (Two Parts—July 29).—The cast: Black La Rue (Harry Caey); His Mother (Bessie Arnold); Cliff Buckley (Joe Rickson); Jane (Olive Fuller Golden); Sheriff (Neal Hart). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Harry Carey.

Black La Rue was born on the Mexican border in times of raids and fights. His father was killed in one of the fights. The circumstances of his birth have in some strange way affected his character so that he can never see a fight without having an irresistible desire to join the fray. Cliff Buckley and his daughter, Jane, arrive in town. Black gets into a fight in front of their house and Jane makes him stop. He is attracted by the interest the girl has taken in him and later asks her father's consent to their marraige. When her father refuses Black is resentful and returns home in a gloomy mood.

That night he decides to come to town to drown his sorrows. Jane sees him and detains him, knowing that he is bent on some mischief. Meanwhile Cliff Buckley gets into a fight over a card game and is arrested by the sheriff. As they go out of the building Buckley struggles and accidentally kills the sheriff. Jane has been standing near with Black and they both hear the shot. They are the first to reach Buckley and, seeing the sheriff on the ground, quickly take in the situation. Black, realizing the position the girl will be in, confesses that he killed the sheriff.

The whole crowd has been drinking and a feeling against Black arises. He is taken in charge by a crowd who leave with him for the hills where they expect to hang him. He is taken to a tree overhanging the river, but just as they are about to hang him he manages to break away by making a wild leap for the river, far below. The men try to stop him but, by the time they can get to the river, Black has escaped. Black makes his way home and his mother looks after his bruises. Just before dawn, when he is preparing to leave the country, Jane comes in. She says that she has learned of his sacrifice and intends to wait for him. Black tells her that he is going away until he can master his strange obsession for fighting, and that he will then return. She promises to wait.

CREATING LIFE FROM A DEAD LEAF (July 27).—Produced by the Educational and Scientific Film Co. of New York City. This picture shows how a dried lettuce leaf, crumbled in a glass of water, can furnish nourishment for the growth of a whole colony of bacteria of various species. Also water fleas and fresh water devil fish (hydra) are shown in various stages of sexual reproduction or budding. Also Mexican sword fish, Japanese gold fish, etc., are shown.

JITNEY JACK AND GASOLINA (On same reel as foregoing).—Jack has a mule with a rubber tail. When he tries to stretch it so as to have more tail or more mule, Gasolina objects. She said it was not in the contract. So she kicked Jack way into the middle of next week. He landed on a train bound for the coast. So Gasolina is in New York, her tail in San Francisco and a flea was biting her in Kansas. So she joined her master. He shot the flea and they meandered home right merrily.

JOKER.

I'VE GOT YER NUMBER (July 29).—The cast: Mr. Binks (Wm. Franey); Mrs. Binks (Gale Henry); Village Constable (Chas. Conklin); Flo, cabaret dancer (Lillian Peacock); Mr. Spinner (Milburn Moranti). Written by A. E. Bishop. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Mr. Binks, the henpecked husband of the stern Mrs. Binks, goes to a banquet at the Cafe Salome, but it is only because the occasion is one of the gravest business importance that she permits him to go. Being somewhat late, he drives his car to the cafe and there proceeds to drown his sorrows. Now comes along Mr. Spinner, who after speeding things up in the cafe, takes Flo, the cabaret girl, out for a spin. Being pretty tipsy he can't make his own car go so he swipes the nearest other one, which, unfortunately, belongs to Binks. During his joy ride Spinner does much damage in certain rural sections, ending up by smashing Slowton's monument, but Hank, the village constable at Slowton, gets the number of the car. Spinner returns Binks' car undamaged long before Binks is ready for it.

Well, things might not have been so bad for Binks the next morning when the charges were preferred against him for manslaughter, joy riding with pretty cabaret girls and destruction of valuable property, if a strange coincident had not occurred. During the most vital transaction of business affairs at the cafe, Binks, lying snoozing on a divan, dreams of the pretty cabaret girls; of his taking them out spinning in his car, of numerous smashups to the other parties, of getting away from the constable of Slowtown and of the very destruction of the monument of Slowtown.

So when Binks sees the warrant for his arrest, he actually believes himself guilty. He tips Hank, the constable, to give him time to make good the damages before his wife learns all. Mrs. Binks discovers Binks in the act of buying the girls hats and gowns to make amends. But Spinner arrives and explains all, so everybody is once more happy.

NESTOR.

Fresh from Hicktown's leading emporium, Lee and Eddie arrive at the beach for a week's outing. "Fadeway" Ann, a notable crook, and her pal have learned that the house of a millionaire containing some valuable painting is left in the care of a drunken caretaker. To carry out their plan they decide to get a "sucker" to do the dangerous work. In search of the easy mark, Ann strolls along the beach and meets Eddie. She makes an appointment to see him that night.

Eddie proves a willing accomplice until the girl tells him that she is being plotted against and wants him to rob a house of some paintings that belong to her. Here he balks and Ann leaves him. Left alone, Eddie meditates over the matter and indulges free in wine. His courage receiving this impetus, he at last decides to aid the lady in distress.

Disgusted, Ann returns to the hotel and sees Lee hanging around. She again tries her sympathy "gag" and Lee falls for it at once. Learning she needs a protector he gladly agrees to get her "rightful possessions" and securing an outfit suitable to open an arsenal, he sets out. Eddie, meanwhile, fired with his new courage, knocks out the waiter when he demands his pay and, securing a wagon and tools, puts on a mask and hurries to the house.

The watchman is sleeping off a drunk, and after many trials Eddie at last gets in through the cellar door. Lee, too, arrives and after several attempts, manages to get in the house. He goes to some of the rooms and starts to overhaul the house, not knowing that Eddie is at work. The caretaker awakens and, seeing lights in the house, calls a policeman and investigates. They succeed in capturing the intruders.

A detective, however, has been following the crooks and at last hears them confessing the prearranged robbery of the paintings. He takes them in charge and hurries them to the police station. All the parties come together here and Ann, seeing "the police have the goods on her," states that she never saw the two rubes before. They are freed after a lecture by the judge to let "chickens" alone.

AN UNEXPECTED SCOOP (July 28).—The cast: Bert Allen (Richard Stanton); Jim Baker (Jack Wilson); Lesley Hartman (Myrtle Gonzalez). Scenario by Malcolm Strong. Produced by Richard Stanton.

The "Herald's" city editor gives Bert Allen, cub reporter, an opportunity to scoop the "Express" by detailing him to interview Lesley Hartman, the mysterious country architect of Barlow, who has just won the ten thousand dollar prize in the court house design contest. At about the same time, Jim Baker, veteran reporter of the "Express," sets out to scoop on the same story.

When Bert arrives at the Barlow station he looks about, wondering how he is to get out to the Hartman ranch. Spying the blacksmith shop across the street, and seeing a horse tied nearby, it seems likely that he can hire a rig without going further. Walking over to the "smithy," Bert is tempted to turn back when he sees a pretty girl drive past him to the station. But duty demands that he make haste and, besides, the girl holds a baby in her lap, which is discouraging.

Bert persuades the blacksmith to rent him a rig, but must wait until the smith has finished mending the wagon. While this is going on, Bert hears a scream from the pretty girl, whose purse has been snatched by a thief. Bert gives chase to the tramp and after a battle recovers the purse and hurries back with it. He then consents to take charge of the child for a few seconds. In the meanwhile, Jim Baker has arrived at Barlow, and has bribed the blacksmith to hire him the rig.

Bert sees his rival, Jim Baker, driving away with his rig, to steal the story. Bert gives chase with the baby clinging to his neck, and the girl, thinking the child about to be kidnapped, runs wildly after. Baker escapes, and Bert, too angry to explain to the girl, thrusts the baby in her arms and dashes away to whip the traitorous blacksmith. As they are about to fight, the girl comes up and learns what they are in search of. Thereupon she hursts into laughter, announces that she is Lesley Hartman, the architect, and that Baker will have his trip for nothing. Also, she is not married.

LAEMMLE.

THE MASK OF FORTUNE (July 29).—The cast: Fayette Durand (Marjorie Ellison); Edgar Pearson (Jack Connolly); Henry Durand (Malcolm Blevins); Gaston Du Valle (Bert Law. Scenario by Calder Johnstone, Directed by George Cochrane.

Fayette Durand has had since childhood a mysterious ability to foretell the future. Her father scoffs at her power, and an irksome antagonism arises between them. Henry Durand, the father, also objects to Gaston Du Valle as a suitor for his daughter's hand. So Gaston, wishing to exploit Fayette's power, induces her to leave home and establishes her as a professional medium.

A young man called Edgar Pearson calls on her several times to ask her advice about investments and finds that the advice is always sound. One day he asks her about a certain stock and she advises him to buy. Her father, not knowing who she is, asks her advice about the same stock. It is a choice between Edgar and her father. At last she decides to favor Edgar and advises her father to sell.

Later, Fayette's conscience hurts her and she reverses her decision. She rushes to the floor of the exchange and reverses her advice. As a result her father wins a fortune and Edgar loses all he has. When he rebukes Fayette for willfully ruining him, she takes pity on him and takes him to her father to try to make him return some of the money. Durand is immovable until Fayette lifts her veil. Then he relents and Fayette and Edgar are happily married.

PRISCILLA'S PRISONER (Two parts—July 27).—The cast: Priscilla Graves (Cleo Madison); Gerrard Maxime (Charles Gunn); Town Marshal (Ray Hanford); Mrs. Maxime (Mrs. Grassby); Mr. Maxime (Wadsworth Harris); The Judge (Frank McQuarrie). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Cleo Madison.

Gerrard Maxime leaves home with a friend because of a quarrel with his father. After tramping around the country for some time they arrive one day, hungry and tired, at the farm of Priscilla Graves, a girl who is working her own farm. Priscilla is saving up to pay off the mortgage on the farm and Gerrard arrives just as she is putting away her savings. She refuses to give them anything to eat, as they look so terrible.

Gerrard tells his friend of the refusal and also of the money and the two go to pick out a rock for a bed. Gerrard awakes in the night to find his friend gone. Guessing that he has gone to steal the money, Maxime follows and tries to prevent the robbery. Priscilla arrives just in time to capture Gerrard, the friend making his escape.

As punishment Gerrard is sentenced to work out his imprisonment on the farm. He is very happy, as he has fallen in love with Priscilla, until one day he is accused of stealing a horse and without being given a chance to clear himself is beaten by some farmers.

In the meantime his friend has gone home and told the Maxims of their son's plight. They come after him and find him in bed from his beating. Priscilla is, of course, astonished when she learns that Gerrard comes from a prominent family. When Priscilla next goes to her lawyer's to see about the mortgage she finds that it is paid. Gerrard then steps out and offers to be her prisoner for life. Does she accept? She does.

A GREAT LOVE (July 28).—The cast: Harold du Vane (Hayward Mack); Lillian (Mina Cunard); Nell (Vola Smith); Jim (Nobert Myles); Dave (Edward Brown). Scenario written by Fred Myton. Produced by Clifford S. Elfelt.

Harold du Vane and his wife have a misunderstanding, caused by Harold's attentiveness to his paintings. He and his wife quarrel and Harold tells her that he is going to some quiet place where he can work without interruption. A short time later, Harold arrives in the heart of the wilderness. Nearby there is a camp of an old woodcutter, Dave Woodward, and his daughter, Nell. Jim Smith, a young man, assists old Dave with his wood cutting. He has long loved Nell, but she has refused to take his love seriously. She and Harold meet and he recognizes her as a type he is desirous of painting. She is easily persuaded to pose for him. One day Harold realizes that Nell loves him and he feels a pang of regret for leading her on and neglecting his wife. He falls asleep beside a tree.

Nell's father is mortally wounded by a falling tree and Jim brings him to the cabin. Before dying, the old man places the care of his daughter in Jim's hands and tells him he hopes that they will marry. This thought is too much for Nell, and in an outburst she tells Jim that she could never marry him, as the artist has her love. She rushes out and hurries to the artist's camp. She throws herself in Harold's arms and declares her love. He tells her that he is married and that he must return to his wife. She begs him to meet her that night under the fourth tree. Harold goes to the appointed place and finds the fourth tree to be in the midst of a lake. On looking closer, he finds Nell beneath the water. Jim has crept to the place and accused Harold of murdering the girl, and just as Harold is about to be killed he is awakened by Nell playfully shaking him.

He can hardly believe Nell is real. He tells her that he is returning to his wife and that as a wedding present to Jim and herself he is leaving the picture. He returns home and hurrying to his wife room, finds that in his absence a little stranger has arrived. There is a happy reconciliation between husband and wife.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

ADVENTURES OF PEG O' THE RING No. 11, "The Stampede" (Two parts—July 10).—The cast: Peg (Grace Cunard); Doctor Lund, Junior (Francis Ford); Doctor Lund, Senior (Marc Fenton); Mrs. Lund (Jean Hathaway); Flip, the Clown (Pete Gerald); Marcus, the Hindoo (Irving Lippner).

Just as Peg is being rushed from the race-track in an automobile, young Doctor Lund springs on the running board and grapples with the ruffians. He succeeds in rescuing her from their clutches. Marcus then reports to Mrs. Lund that he has again failed to get the letter. Mrs. Lund is furious. A few minutes later the doctor comes in and, seeing the two men there, gives them a thrashing and throws them out of the house. Mrs. Lund meets them outside and tells them to try once more to "get" Peg.

The Doctor now goes to Peg's tent at the circus to give her the letter which he has been keeping for her. But she overhears the ruffians planning to get it, so gives it back to him for safe keeping. Marcus and his man attack him, but he cleverly escapes.

Marcus now plans to shoot Peg while she is performing in the ring and has procured a Maxim silencer for the purpose. He shoots through a hole in the tent and succeeds in causing her to fall from her horse. Every one rushes to her assistance and in the general excitement an elephant gets loose. The elephant picks up Peg's prostrate body and runs off.

The elephant drops Peg in a lumber yard, where Flip and Dr. Lund go to look for her. But Peg is seen by a couple of harbor pirates, who decide to capture her. A young rowdy tries to save her, but is knocked aside. Dr. Lund finds the young man and learns that Peg has been taken away in a boat. He hires a launch and follows with the rowdy.

On the boat the pirates draw lots for the possession of Peg. When she regains consciousness she struggles for her freedom and finally succeeds in defending herself in a room. Here the pirate who has won her comes for her. But the doctor has boarded the boat with his friend. He looks for Peg while his friend holds the pirates at bay. After finding Peg and knocking out the man who was forcing his attentions on her, the doctor and Peg are cornered in the stern of the ship by the pirates, who have overcome the young man holding them at bay.

RED FEATHER.

TEMPTATION AND THE MAN (Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Jim Crosby (Hobart Henley); John Payton, a banker (Bert Bushy); Ann Payton, his daughter (Sydell Dowling); Temple Vaughn (Sydney Bracey); Phil Johnson (Joseph Cranby); Mamma Costelle (Clara Beyers). Written by Catherine Carr. Produced by Robert F. Hill.

Jim Crosby has shifted for himself since his early childhood. He has become a gangster, feared by all his companions because of his strength. In a fight, which he enters for his sister's sake, he is arrested and sent to jail for a term of months.

In the meantime Ann Payton, a society girl, has rented a saloon which she has turned into a mission. She is engaged to be married to Temple Vaughn, her father's young secretary, but decides to wait a year before marrying. The day that Jim is released from prison he gets mixed up in a brawl and, knowing that the police are just waiting a chance to arrest him again, he seeks refuge in the old saloon, a former hangout. Ann takes him in and shelters him from the police.

Vaughn has been leading a fast life and has become involved with a woman by the name of Costello and a gambler called Johnson. He loses heavily, and to pay the debt forges a check. Jim, who has been given a position in the bank, recognizes Johnson when he comes to cash the check. He discovers that Vaughn is not able to meet the check, and in lieu of settlement Johnson forces Vaughn to invite a number of his wealthy friends to his house for a game of cards. Jim overhears the two planning the card party and, knowing Ann's love for Vaughn, he decides to get the check and so prevent any further blackmail.

At the party Vaughn stands seeing his friends fleeced as long as he can and then accuses Johnson of cheating. Then a figure appears at the door, holding a pistol. He rifles all their pockets, taking the money on the table and the forged check. But in robbing Vaughn, Jim slips in his pocket the forged check. Jim is caught while trying to make his escape and is sentenced to a term in prison. Some time later Vaughn finds in his pocket the forged check and realizes that Jim has committed the crime only to save him. He offers to take all the blame, but Jim will not listen.

After his marriage Vaughn again gets connected with Johnson and his mistress. There is a quarrel and Johnson is arrested for running a gambling house. In prison he meets Jim and tells him that the first thing he does upon his release from prison will be to kill Vaughn. Later they are both released on the same day. Jim goes at once to warn Vaughn who arrives a few moments after and who accuses Jim of paying attention to his wife. Jim tries to warn him, but Johnson steps out from behind a screen and shoots him through the heart. In the last scene Jim and Ann are seen together, establishing another mission in the Bowery. It is left to the spectator whether or not Jim will ever succeed in overcoming the great social gap which lies between them.

GOLD SEAL.

A SPLASH OF LOCAL COLOR (Two parts—July 26).—The cast: Bessie Lee (Mary Fuller); Thomas Harvey (Joseph W. Girard); Jake, a Gangster (Charles Slattery); Bill, another Gangster (Ed. Murphy). Adapted by Catherine Carr from the story of Clifford F. Ivins. Produced by Lucius Henderson.

Bessie Lee, a writer, is rooming in a cheap New York lodging house, an uncle in the country forwarding her an allowance each month. One morning with a rejected manuscript Bessie receives a sarcastic note from Thomas Harvey, editor of "Modern Life," a monthly magazine, informing her that she will never sell a story until she has had actual experience. Her uncle dies, leaving her a heritage of debts. Reduced to poverty, Bessie accosts a pedestrian and asks for money. The man happens to be a detective and he arrests her. The judge, after hearing her story, sentences her to the Home of the Good Shepherd.

As the detective is about to lead her away a man seated in the rear of the court room, who has been an interested listener, rises, tells the judge that he is a Western ranch owner, that he likes Bessie's looks, believes her story and will marry her and give her a good home. Bessie agrees to marry the stranger. Bessie, giving the name of Alice Kale, and the man, giving the name of Tom Moore, are married in the Night Court. Tom takes Bessie to a dilapidated furnished room in another part of the city. There they find food, which Bessie ravenously devours. Two gangsters indulge in a quarrel in a nearby saloon. One gangster strikes the other and flees; the other gangster, pistol in hand, pursues.

Bessie finishes her meal. Tom tells her that he is a burglar, that he lied in the court, and warns her not to leave the room until he returns. As Tom steps out in the upper hallway the fleeing gangster, who has dodged into the door below, arrives at the head of the stairs and hides behind a barrel. The pursuing gangster enters the lower hall, sees Tom at the head of the stairs, mistakes him for the enemy and fires at him. Tom sinks to the floor wounded. By a clever ruse Bessie makes them believe she was the victim of the shot and sends them on a wild goose chase. The gangster, who hid behind the barrel, appears, congratulates the terrified Bessie on the clever way she "stalled" the "bulls" and helps her lay Tom on the bed in the room. As the days go by Bessie nurses Tom and works as a scrub woman in a nearby drug store. Evenings and in spare moments she writes a story based on her recent experience.

One morning Tom, much improved, leaves a note for Bessie and disappears. Bessie sends her story, "A Splash of Local Color," to "Modern Life," giving her address as general delivery, so that Tom will not know what she is doing. She returns to the room, finds Tom gone and discovers the note. In the note Tom informs Bessie that he is not a burglar, and says he is worse than that, a masquerader, who married her for selfish reasons with the deliberate intention of deserting her, but instead of carrying out his plans he fell madly in love with her and could not stand living platonically with her any longer. The note concludes: "If you love me, wait for my return one week from today, when you shall know me as my true self." Bessie is delighted, for she has grown to love Tom. One morning she gets a letter from "Modern Life." Editor Harvey writes that he accepts "A Splash of Local Color" and adds that he recently took great pains and jeopardized his life to obtain local color for a story which he himself intended to write along the same lines, but that Bessie's story is better and he wishes she would call personally at the office so that he may congratulate her and hand her the check. Bessie is greatly surprised to learn that "Tom Moore" is Editor Harvey. Having learned each other's identity, Harvey takes Bessie into his arms.

VICTOR.

JUST A FEW LITTLE THINGS (July 26).—The cast: Archie (Victor Potel); Mildred (Ruby Cox); Fred (Wallace Beery); Nurse (Gretchen Lederer). Written and produced by Wallace Beery.

Archie, a man well past the age of forty-five, proposes to Mildred, a young and pretty girl, and is rejected. Fred, her youthful lover, then enters and does the same thing, and is accepted. As Fred leaves the house, it is very windy and a young lady passing by gets some dust in her eyes. He tries to assist and from Mildred's window it appears that he is embracing the young lady. Mildred's temper quickly rises, and she writes to Fred, calling off their engagement.

She then telephones Archie, and they marry immediately. Arriving at Archie's home, Mildred is dumfounded to find that she has suddenly become the mother of six children. Fred becomes sick, and the tender sympathies of the nurse at the hospital so plays on his heart that he proposes marriage. After the ceremony, he goes to his bride's house and finds he has married a widow with seven children.

One year elapses. Mildred is dressed in mourning; Fred is without a wife. They meet by accident one day and after explanations have straightened matters out, they decide to get married at once. After the marriage they find they have a family of thirteen children; but in the final scene they are both happy, as they send the thirteen off to school.

THE LATEST IN VAMPIRES (Two Parts—July 30).—The cast: "Mug" Leavy (Harry C. Myers); Elbert Diggs (Sidney Bracey); Loretta, his wife (Rosemary Theby). Written by Harry Ditmar. Produced by Harry C. Myers.

The scene opens upon a family squabble between Diggs and his wife. Then enters "Mugs" Leavy on robbery intent. But "Mug" is discovered by Elbert. "Mug," however, has the presence of mind to seize a picture of Mrs. Diggs and cry in a tragic manner, "My God, who is that woman?" "Mug" then sinks into a chair and tells his story.

In the opening picture we see "Mug" taking a fond farewell of his mother. In the city "Mug" struggles to make his way as an artist. With the help of some wealthy patrons "Mug" succeeds in his profession. One night, in search of inspiration, he meets the vampire, Loretta. "Mug's" prosperity increases, but Loretta develops into a regular vampire. His sweetheart in the country comes to rescue her lover from the wiles of temptation, but after one look at his old sweetheart "Mug" decides that he prefers the vampire. Then Loretta deserts him for one of his wealthy patrons and "Mug" goes to the dogs. And while Elbert is trying to get an explanation out of his hysterical wife, "Mug" silently makes his departure.

When "Mug" arrives at the saloon where he and his pals are accustomed to hang out, he is so elated that he orders drinks for the whole house and proceeds to tell the story of his clever getaway. At that he might have gotten away with the job had not a couple of plain-clothes men been lurking in the back of the saloon and heard the story. In the station house the lieutenant has a great laugh over the whole affair. But when Diggs hears how he has misjudged his wife he implores forgiveness and Loretta is overjoyed at the fact that she could be a dangerous vampire if she wanted to. "Mug" is seen languishing in a cell as the picture fades out.

REX.

WAR-RIDDEN MEXICO (Special Release)—(July 11).—Views of the sections where the fighting is going on, Chihuahua, Carranza, Obregon and Villa are shown. Views of American troops as they are to-day and as they were several years ago, a view of the bridge at Columbus, after Villa's raid. Other tense scenes.

CROSS PURPOSES (July 25).—The cast: John Standing (Jack Connolly); Lisa (Jessie Arnold); the Grand Duke (Wm. Canfield). Written by Bess Meredyth. Produced by Wm. Worthington.

Lisa, a popular actress, is in the power of the Grand Duke. There is a young man in the war office desperately in love with her and she is also infatuated with him. The Grand Duke orders her to procure some papers for him from young Whitley and she hesitatingly is forced to obey.

Whitley arrives and she notices some papers in his coat pocket. Thinking these are the required documents, she proceeds to drug young Whitley. The Grand Duke, being in the next room, there is no way out. But Whitley sees her drug the wine and, instead of drinking it, pours it out and feigns to be in a stupor. When she starts to take the papers her love for the man overcomes her fear for the duke, and she locks the door to the room where the duke is and tries to waken Whitley. But the duke breaks down the door.

There ensues a terrific struggle, which ends in the overthrow of the duke. Whitley then says that he is John Standing of the secret service, on detail to find out who it is that wants to steal the plans. Standing then tells Lisa that she is his prisoner. She offers to be led away, but he tells her that if she is willing he will be her jailer for life.

VOGUE.

JEALOUSY A LA CARTE (July 25).——The cast: The Waiter (Rube Miller); The Cook (Arthur Tavares); The Songbird (Alice Neice); The Cashier (Madge Kirby). Directed by Rube Miller.

Art and Rube are both employed in the same cafe, Rube as a waiter and Art as a chef. They are both in love with Alice, a Spanish dancer, who is an entertainer in the cafe. They are bitter rivals for her favor and come to blows about her, much to the detriment of the service of the cafe. The proprietor settles this, and as he likes them both, allows them to continue in the service of the place.

Madge comes to the cafe as a cashier. Art and Rube see her and fall for her. Madge being a flirt, encourages them both. They have a bitter quarrel about her, which winds up in a duel between them with meat cleavers as the weapons. As a climax to their struggles to win her favor, Madge is attracted by the brass buttons of a policeman, and falls in love with him. Alice, too, is charmed with brass buttons, so Madge and Alice leave Art and Rube and go with a couple of strange policemen who happen to come on the scene. Art is so disgusted that he polishes a frying pan, hands it to Rube. Rube then hits Art and himself on the head and they both pass away.

FOR TEN THOUSAND BUCKS—(Two Parts—July 23).—The cast: Bungling Bill (Paddy McQuire); Bloggie (Ben Turpin); Braveheart (Arthur Moon); His Sweetheart (Gypsy Abbott); Valentine (Jack Gaines); Carmen (Nell Farrin); Ignatz Daschundsky (Ed. Laurie). Directed by Jack Dillon.

Bungling Bill and Bloggie steal a letter and a Ford machine, and the owner and the police chase them. After a series of adventures these two bungling men take refuge in the apartment of Carmen Sapho, an adventuress, who holds them up at the point of a gun and searches them. Finding the stolen letter on their person, she reads the contents and learns therefrom that ten thousand dollars is to be shipped from Canarsie station on the limited train that afternoon. She hires them to go to the station and steal the shipment. Arriving in Canarie, they are arrested for illegal train riding and are forced to act as strike breakers during the strike which is then in progress on the road. This strike has been fomented by Malcolm Valentine, a villain, who revenges himself in this way upon the superintendent, who, with Jack Braveheart, a railroad detective, rescued Rena, an operator, from his clutches. Inciting the men to strike, Valentine defies the road, and it was this fact that caused Bungling Bill and Bloggie to choose between six months in jail or brave the anger of the strikers. They choose the latter.

Dressed in brakemen attire, they go to take the tickets of the passengers boarding the limited with disastrous results. In the meantime Carmen has come, and learning the address of Daschundsky, the man who is making the shipment, she trails him from his house and sees him enter the bank with a bag. Duplicating the bag, she comes back and follows him into the office of the superintendent, where she switches the bags and is about to make off with the money when Valentine comes into the office. He, too, has learned about the shipment, and knocking the superintendent unconscious, he is about to leave the office with the worthless bag when he sees Carmen. He recognizes her as a woman he deserted and at a refusal to a reconciliation, she allows him to go with a bag filled with newspapers.

At the station Valentine realizes he has been tricked and he has two tools board the train to steal the bag from Carmen. She has lost the bag that contained the money by absent mindedly taking the bag Valentine rid himself of when he found the contents were worthless. The events that follow are fast and furious. The fights on the train with Bungling Bill and Bloggie finally obtaining the bag, the kidnapping of Rena, the race between a train and automobile, the mail bag snapped off the mail crane with two human beings inside, the final roundup of the culprits with the money bag finding its way back to the owner through the ingenuity of Jack Braveheart and his sweetheart, make this a snappy comedy.

CENTAUR.

THE HAUNTED SYMPHONY (Two Parts—July 29).—The cast: Norman Brice (Crane Wilbur); Dr. Barstow (Claude Mortenson); Dr. Andrew Smiley (Frederick Montague); Sarah Kayton (Jessie Burnett); Paul Kayton (John Oaker); Wilfred Redmond (Lloyd Holton); Marcia Redmond (Mae Gaston). Directed by Robert B. Broadwell.

Dr. Andrew Smiley, a brain specialist and a hypnotist, is the guardian of Wilfred and Marcie Redmond, brother and sister, and both rich in their own right. Smiley wishes to marry Marcia, as he is badly in need of money, but when he proposes she rejects him. Smiley has a secret mistress in Sarah Kayton, the head nurse of his sanitarium, and she has borne him a son, Paul Kayton, who is Smiley's secretary, without knowledge of the fact that his employer is his father. Wilfred Redmond, a musical genius, writes a musical composition which his sister Marcia calls "The Haunted Symphony." Wilfred incurs the enmity of Paul, who loves Marcia also.

That same night Norman Brice, a student of mental science and a musician, is injured in his laboratory by a chemical explosion and on his way home he is overcome by temporary blindness. He is forced to appeal to a drunken passerby for assistance and the intoxicated man leads him to the wrong house, which proves to be Dr. Smiley's sanitarium. His key fits the door and he feels his way up the stairs to the second floor, thinking he is in his own home and intending to 'phone his physician, Dr. Barstow. At this instant Wilfred is murdered in a mysterious manner, and Marcia, coming upon his body, loses her reason and her memory. Brice, the blinded man, hears her screams and bursts into the room. He stumbles over the body of Wilfred and in groping about finds a photo on the table which he clutches in his hand as he rushes from the house in an agony of horror.

When Brice recovers his sight and reason several days later he finds himself in a hospital under the care of his friend, Dr. Barstow, and in the papers he reads of the murder of Wilfred Redmond and the confession of his sister, Marcia, who seems to have lost her reason and memory. Comparing the newspaper cut of Marcia with the photo in his possession Brice knows that he was in the room just after the murder was committed and he realizes that this Marcia Redmond was the girl whose screams he heard. He falls in love with the photo, and feeling that she is innocent of the crime he determines to solve the mystery and clear her name.

The coroner has adjudged Marcia insane and committed her to the care of her guardian in his sanitarium. Brice has Dr. Barstow commit him to the sanitarium as a patient suffering with melancholia. There he finds a copy of "The Haunted Symphony" and with the aid of the melody he recalls Marcia's memory and proves Dr. Smiley to be the real murderer.

CUB.

THE MASQUE BALL (July 28).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Count (George George); Marie (Claire Alexander); Mother (Janet Sully); Father (Louis FitzRoy); First Waiter (Ray Lincoln); Second Waiter (Robert Kenyon); Footman (Gordon MacGregor); Joe (Arthur Mund); Sergeant (Jefferson Osborne); Cop (Harry Jackson). Directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

Jerry's courtship of a little heiress is again interrupted by a French Count. Unable to gain his point because of the presence of the Count, Jerry decides to dispose of the intruder and he is successful with the aid of a brick. Jerry then escorts his lady love to her home, while the foreigner is arrested by two policemen who believe he is demented. Arriving at the girl's house Jerry is at once ousted by the father, and as he is attempting to escape the old man's wrath, he upsets a butler who is carrying a number of invitations to a masque ball to the mail box. The invitations are strewn all over the sidewalk and in picking them up for the butler Jerry places three of them in his pocket.

The night of the ball Jerry ventures near the house. He is watching the festivities from outside, when he is attracted by two burglars, who are attempting to gain an entrance to the place by jimmying a window. A second glance reveals the fact that the crooks are old friends of Jerry's. Jerry calls to them and they recognize him. He tells them that he has invitations to the ball and that it will be an easy way for them to gain an entrance to the place. He offers them his assistance if they will furnish him with a mask. They agree.

The trio go to the entrance of the house and Jerry presents the invitations and the butlers admit them. Announced as three distinguished guests, they attract considerable attention. Jerry soon discovers his sweetheart, and while he is dancing with her the Count learns who the diminutive one behind the mustache is. He rips Jerry's mask from his face and likewise the mustache and an uproar follows.

While Jerry and the Count are racing through the house, the crooks discover the safe and decide to blow it. Jerry runs to the balcony on the second floor and the Count follows him. The two struggle and Jerry throws the Count over the railing and down into a big fountain in the center of the ballroom. The police arrive, simultaneously with the exploding of the safe and as they give chase after the two crooks they come across Jerry. He throws one of them over the railing and into the fountain and when he rushes down stairs he is confronted by others. The crooks are captured and taken away, and as Jerry is about to be arrested the girl pleads for him. As the policeman considers and attempts a flirtation with the girl, Jerry pushes him into the fountain and makes his escape.

BEAUTY.

IN THE LAND OF THE TORTILLA (July 19): The cast: Emerson Howe (John Gough); Karl Kerner (John Sheehan); Veeha (Jerry); Caperanza (John Steppling); Francisca (Carol Halloway); Tortura (Dick Rosson).

Emerson Howe was consul to Mexico and he wasn't safe by any means. Suddenly his front door was opened and in rushed an American followed by a band of Mexicans. Howe quieted the turmoil and asked the newcomer his antecedents. The answer was a card which revealed the fact that the man was Karl Kerner, cameraman for the Associated Press Dispatch. The confab was interrupted by a message from Washington which informed Howe that Veeha was captured by Caperanza and was about to be executed by him. Photographic proofs were necessary. Karl offered to get them. Caperanza was angry because Veeha had beat him to the generalship of the Tortillian army. Caperanza had decreed that no one should see the execution unless personally invited. Karl Kerner tried to get in with the Consul's credentials, but when the Mexican general saw the funny little box with the crank on it he thought dire things and refused the camera entry.

Karl wandered on the outside of the fort and came upon Francisca, who was gazing at some cards she held in her hand. They exchanged greetings and Karl saw that the cards were pictures of all the famous movie actresses. Francisca was a movie fan. Karl told her that he would put her name in "bright lights" on Broadway, providing she would let him photograph Veeha's execution from her boudoir window. Francisca agreed.

To make an interesting story Francisca must be loved by some one—say, for instance, the Corporal in her daddy's corps. And Tortura must see Francisca with the Gringo, and he must immediately suspect something. But Karl impresses Francisca that if he does not get the picture there will be no Caperanza on Broadway. Francisca hides the camera, and Veeha stands by the wall at sundown.

Karl cranked off the execution and was about finished when he was discovered from the courtyard by Tortura. He made his way to the street. The whole Mexican army started chase. Karl mounted his mule and started for the desert. Tortura impressed Francisca with the proof that the American was going away without fulfilling his promise. Francisca grabbed a rifle and joined the army that was chasing Karl. Out into the desert went the fighters. Karl's mule was shot under him and using it as a shield he pumped his puny automatic in an endeavor to stop the oncoming host. But they were closing in on him.

A detachment of Uncle Sammy's cavalry with their supply truck stops for rations. The lookout through his glass sees Karl being cornered by the mob of Mexicans. Orders to the cavalry and they ride into action! Karl was reinforced and the fighting was on in earnest. But the Americans were far outnumbered and the Mexicans kept coming. Karl, not wise to the danger, thought it would be a great idea to "shoot" some of the battle stuff with his camera. He planted it and cranked with one hand while he shot Mexicans with the other. Then the peons got a glimpse of the camera. Terror overtook them and they retreated. And when the smoke of the battle blew away the soldiers mounted Karl upon their shoulders, gave him the "hip-hip-hurrar," and started back for little old U. S. A.—with the proofs of Veeha's demise.

It's not often that stories "happen" in a studio, but such is the case. The story was a terror for the actors who were to take part in it and when they heard that there was to be a lot of "thrill stuff" that would surely end in some one being hurt they resolved to avert it if possible. One of the characters strolled in with a peculiar purchase he had just made. The purchase consisted of a box of "Dreamo Pills," every color advertised to produce a different dream. Yellow was for the vampire stuff, and thinking that perhaps a vampire was not quite as dangerous as a thrill one of the actors dropped a yellow pill into each of the glasses of grape juice which the director and the author was sipping. And while Morpheus took a hand in it the bunch departed for the beach for a dip into the surf.

It was a funny dream that the director and his author had, all about a vampire who captured the director in the face of her lover. And naturally the spurned lover followed her to her apartments, where he saw her play for the passions of the poor director. The "Vamp's" servant stood watch while the Vamp and her quarry partook of sparkling beverage. But the servant didn't watch keenly, as was evidenced when the spurned lover took a shot at the glass the director was holding and knocked it out of his hand. Then there was turmoil, as the spurned one and the new one struggled in the room. The servant drew a curved knife and proceeded to puncture the spurned lover who was causing the most noise. But the director could not see a defenceless life taken and came to the rescue of the spurned one. Then the villain had a revulsion of feeling and wept on the shoulder of the man who had saved his life. He was forgiving the vampire to the director for life, but the director's experience was sufficient, so he joined the vampire's hands with those of the man she had spurned and left the scene as a good hero should.

Then the bunch returned from their dip in the surf and found the director and author still sleeping. They shook them into the light and they awakened with a start. The question of a story was again broached and the director and his author found that they had dreamed fairly good ones. They swapped dreams and the writer started banging his typewriter, while the director went out to cast his people and get the story under way.

MUTUAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE—(No. 10—Two Parts—July 24).—The cast: Cleo Burke (Juanita Hansen); Lieut. Jarvis Hope, U. S. N. (Thomas Chatterton); Olga Ivanoff (Hylda Hollis); Gerald Morton (Lamar Johnstone); Hook Barnacle (George Clancy); Satusma (William Tedmarsh); Mahlin (George Webb).

Hook Barnacle arrives on the scene and prevents Mahlin from chopping cable on which Hope was crossing the chasm. Mahlin is suddenly hurled over the cliff by Hook. Hope reaches Cleo and an affectionate reunion takes place.

Suddenly an aeroplane appears. Morton and Olga are the occupants. Hope and Cleo attempt an escape in the cable basket, but Morton, not to be foiled, opens fire at the couple. However, Hope returns fire by expert marksmanship, send a shot through the gasoline tank of the aeroplane and Morton and Olga are surrounded by fire. Morton attempts to land, but looking down sees the posse of motorcycle policemen pursuing him for the theft of the aeroplane. Suddenly the aircraft swerves and hits straight for the ground.

Mahlin, luckily, escapes injury by his fall and later joins Satsuma in time to see the aeroplane disappear behind a jutting rock. The aeroplane explodes, but Aviator Smith arrives on the scene quickly and is fired upon by Morton, who is uninjured, as is Olga. Smith returns the fire, but finally gets wounded and tumbles off from the motorcycle. The police dash forward, but Morton quickly climbs on the machine, and with Olga makes a race for the town.

Hope and Cleo join Hook and are examining the books, when they are suddenly attacked by Mahlin and Satsuma. Hope and Hook are injured, while Cleo flees for the hills, with the spies in pursuit. Hope and Hook recover and search the mountains in all directions for Cleo. Hope finally discovers Cleo, apparently exhausted. Hope also sees Satsuma about to kill Cleo. He shouts a warning and starts to cross a small stream to aid her. Half way across he is caught in quicksand and is unable to extricate himself. Cleo sees Hope struggling.

Cleo, looking over the cliff, spies a long grapevine and climbing down the tough vine she reaches the end and thrusts her foot towards Hope, who instantly grasps her ankle and draws himself up. Mahlin appears at the top of the cliff, having witnessed Satsuma's discomfiture, and suddenly cuts the vine—the thin thread on which hung the lives of Hope and Cleo.

MUSTANG.

THE DYSPEPTIC—(Two Parts—July 21).—The cast: Tom (Ashton Dearholt); Agnes (Nita Davis); James Connell (George Gebhart); Pedro (Edward Moraga); Maria (Maria Van Tassell). Directed by William Bertram.

Tom is told by Connell, an elderly millionaire, that he will have to quit hanging around Agnes until he proves that he is worthy of her. Connell is a self-made made, and he insists that Tom prove that he is a capable business man. He tells him that if he is really clever to get some of his money from him.

A trick of fate brings Tom to the West, and there he learns that Connell, who suffers severely from chronic dyspepsia, is on his way West in his private car. A little later, when the Pacific Limited stops at a watering tank in the mountains, Tom, wearing a mask, enters Connell's private car and forces Connell and Agnes to accompany him into the mountains.

He takes them to a locality where there is but one way of escape, and this is guarded by a Mexican. Connell is allowed his freedom and makes desperate endeavors to climb the rugged cliffs, but always in vain. Agnes chances to learn that the masked kidnapper is Tom, and when he tells her his scheme she joins in with him.

A month has passed, and constant climbing, wholesome food and hard work had worked wonders with Connell, and he finds himself thoroughly cured. Tom now discloses his identity to him and recalls to him a statement that Connell had made to the effect that he would give any one a million dollars who would cure him of his dyspepsia. Connell, cured and happy, makes good the promise, and finding that Tom has been clever enough to get some of his money, consents to his engagement to Agnes.

AMERICAN.

THE DANCER—(Two Parts—July 17).—The cast: Capella (Vivian Rich); John Madden (King Clark); His Father (George Periolat); His Mother (Louise Lester); Daisy Brown (Margaret Nichols). Directed by Carl M. Le Viness.

Johnny Madden, the ambitious son of a prosperous farmer, tires of the dullness of country life, and much against his mother's wishes, goes to the city to seek his fortune. He leaves behind him a little, vain, foolish country girl, Daisy Brown, who loves him with all her shallow heart, and whom his mother expected him to marry.

In the city he meets and loves Capella, a popular dancer. At first he sees her only in her spangles and stage finery, and worships her at a distance, but as he gets acquainted with her and sees her in ordinary street garments he loses his awe of her, proposes, is accepted, and they are married. They are ideally happy, but Johnny's mother and Daisy Brown are not satisfied. They beg the wife to give up Johnny and let him return to his home.

Yielding at last to their importunities Capella leads Johnny to believe she has voluntarily deserted him, and advises him to go back to his mother, which he does. Months pass and at last, noting his continued despondency, the mother reveals the plot. They find Capella in a hospital with a little baby, the image of Johnny, and in their new joys the past is forgotten.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

DOORSTEPS (Turner—Five parts—July 20).—George Newlands, a young playwright in reduced circumstances, is forced to take lodgings with Mrs. Skipps, mistress of a badly kept furnished-room house. Doorsteps is the maid of all work and is so unaccustomed to kindness that she appreciates every word and thought of the newcomer, who is tolerant with her. She is an interesting character and her eccentric amusing personality creeps into George's play, which he is writing. He submits his play to a theatrical agency, and shortly after receives a check for five hundred dollars. Boyishly enthusiastic at the acceptance of his work, George leaves the shabby lodgings, with but a hasty good-bye to Doorsteps.

Doorsteps is discharged that same day for a minor offense, and she is soon reduced to selling laces for a living. Tozer, a slum thief, is attracted to the girl and offers to marry her if she will help him in his stealing. Doorsteps, loyal to the memory of George, refuses. George, realizing what an inspiration the little servant was to him, tries to seek her out, but to no avail. Doorsteps tries her luck as an entertainer at the gallery entrance to a theater one evening. A theatrical manager sees her and offers her a position in a new revue that he is rehearsing. She scores a success in the revue and the following season is cast for the role of "Pierrot," sharing honors with the leading woman. The star is jealous of Doorsteps, and after an open break between the two women, Doorsteps is asked to go in order that the manager may keep the good will of the star.

Despondent, she goes back to selling laces, and again Tozer sees her and annoys her. She turns him over to the police. About this time Doorsteps again sees George and overhears a conversation between him and the producer of his new play, Edmund Wade. They are having trouble selecting a girl for the role of the picketpocket and a plan forms in Doorsteps' mind. She goes to the home of Wade and by a clever ruse obtains admission. She steals Wade's watch and then asks him if she may have the part of the pickpocket, as she believes she can qualify, pulling out the watch. Believing she is a thief, Wade turns her over to the police. George enters and explains that she is a friend of his and frees her. Doorsteps is cast for the leading role in the new play and scores another triumph.

Tozer, now out of prison, reads about the opening performance in the newspaper and plans revenge. He goes to the theater and comes upon the stage, revolver in hand, to attack Doorsteps, who was responsible for his imprisonment. The audience consider the struggle a realistic scene and applaud. But the author, George, knows differently and springs from his box to save the girl. He is wounded himself. During his illness he calls for Doorsteps and she comes to him after every performance to comfort and care for him. Finally Wade sends her to America to appear in a new production and she is forced to leave George before he has recovered from his delirium. She leaves a note, however, which he treasures. Two years later Doorsteps returns to England to find George in Mrs. Skipps' lodging house, poverty stricken and discouraged. Wade promises to put on George's latest play if Doorsteps will star in it, which means prosperity and happiness for the reunited lovers.

The films are unique among the many pictorial descriptions of the war that have come to this country.
—Morning Telegraph.

The pictures are doubly interesting because they show more clearly than has previously been done America's contribution to the great war, in addition to some stirring scenes of the conflict itself.—N. Y. Times.

For the first time the public will have an opportunity to witness the stirring heroism which is being displayed by Americans in the European War. Now it will get a chance to see for itself just exactly what this country is doing to relieve the suffering in the great conflict abroad—how foreign relief work is carried on.

This is a picture of tense action—taken sometimes within twenty yards of the German trenches—a picture of stirring realism and brave deeds. You can almost hear the roar of the guns and the explosion of shells as they burst on all sides.

"THE EUROPEAN WAR"

Stirring chronicles of the brave deeds of the American ambulance drivers who risk death.—Evening Sun.

Paris, June 18th, 1916.

1457 Broadway, New York City.

Gentlemen:—

On behalf of the American Ambulance Hospital I desire to thank you for your offer to distribute for exhibition the motion pictures taken by the French Government and dealing with the Field Service of this Hospital at the Front, at actual cost to you.

We regard this generous offer as fortuitous at this time when it is so necessary to reach the greatest possible number of motion picture theatres and patrons with the least expenditure of time, in order that the people may be made acquainted with the heroic work our American boys are doing in aiding the wounded soldiers.

We are arranging for the formation of local committees of influential men and women who will work with the local theatres to stimulate interest in the pictures and increase patronage where they may be shown. I believe by this means we will be able to largely increase the attendance, by attracting people who may not heretofore have attended motion picture theatres.

Again assuring you of our appreciation of your efforts in our behalf, I am,

Very sincerely,

(Signed) ROBERT BACON, President,
American Ambulance Hospital in Paris.

It is no exaggeration to say that this is one of the greatest opportunities exhibitors have yet been offered to increase their box office returns. You cannot afford to overlook this chance to identify your theatre with a feature that will unfailingly attract the best patronage—with a feature that the best people in your town are trying to make a success. Write, or better yet wire your nearest Triangle Branch Office for information regarding its presentation.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 11, "The Lost Paradise" (Arrow Film Corp.—Two Parts—July 17).—Janet Gordon marries a man much older than herself to save her father from financial ruin. She loves Tom Mercer. Her life with her husband finally becomes unendurable, and she follows Tom to a distant town where she is granted a divorce, and marries the man she loves. There are years of happiness, and husband number one turns up and tells her that her divorce wasn't legal. This furnishes the ground-work for a drama that builds up remarkably in two reels.

GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 1, "Fate" (Balboa—Two Parts—July 17).—This episode tells of an English nobleman banished from home because of his attachment to a girl "not of his class." He marries the girl, comes to America with her, and a child, John Burton, subsequently the hero of each chapter of this serial, is born to them.

John grows up, a poor man, working in the steel mills, his only heritage that of "good blood" and its consequent effect on his mental attitude, which, instead of being inert as that of his fellows, is keen and questioning. He is in a way a crude philosopher, seeking answers rather than giving them.

He is a leader among his fellows, and persuades them to strike for more money. Mary Temple, his employer's daughter, has been promised a diamond necklace by her father, who now tells her that because of labor conditions, she will have to forgo her present.

And Mary thinks of the possible effect of her charm of John, with whom she has a slight acquaintance. She goes to him, and "in the name of suffering humanity," persuades him to send the strikers back to work. John later discovers her selfish motive, is repudiated by his fellow-workers, and is about to end it all when he finds he is heir to a title and $10,000,000 and decides to spend his life in an attempt to solve the question "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?"

UNFRIENDLY FRUIT (Mittenthal Film Co.—July 17).—Heinie and Louie rescue a fair dame who tells them her life's history. She is hooked up with a John who thinks women an inferior sex, and she resents it. In fact, she resents it so much that she tells our heroes that she'll give them $5,000 to do away with him, to which the gallant Heinie, always ready to help a lady in distress (for a consideration) answers: "Consider yourself a widow!" The boys write a decoy note to the caveman and get him to their rooms, where they truss him up. They then go and tell friend wife that they come to officially announce that they will kill her husband at midnight, as per specifications. Then they go back, and the surprise that awaits them—well, better see the picture.

HOME SWEET HOME (Pathe—July 17).—This Goldberg cartoon begins with friend wife's admonition to her meal-ticket, thus: "Herman, you stay at home and mind Sylvester. I must attend a suffragette meeting in Rough-house Hall." Then she leaves. Herman gets a hurry call from his pasteboard pals and answers, "All right, Joe, save a stack of chips for me—I'll be right over"; and adds to himself, "I might win enough to buy the little boob something nice like a bottle of medicine."

At the suffrage meeting friend wife argues that "the only thing we will allow the men to keep for themselves is the right to shave."

Herman, a loser at the greatest indoor sport, is about to end it all and delivers himself thus, a la Goldberg: "Little Sylvester can keep from starving by selling the flowers the members of the lodge place on my grave."

At home, little Sylvester, who has been deposited in the wastepaper basket, wherein he finds a bottle of hair tonic. Thus Goldberg: "The hair tonic, with the help of old age, causes Sylvester to look like a dish of spinach." Sylvester's hair grows so rapidly that it becomes cramped for space in the room and trails out of the window, piling itself up in the form of a haystack, and a passing farmer with an eye to business sticks his pitchfork into it and, unwittingly, takes up hair, Sylvester, and everything else attached.

THE CATERPILLAR (Pathe—On the same reel as foregoing).—This subject shows the caterpillar, whose insatiable hunger is responsible for the destruction of so many gardens.

THE SHADOW OF HER PAST (Gold Rooster Play—Five Parts—July 17).—Elayne Chalmers goes to Italy to finish her musical education, and there meets and falls in love with Peter Marsant, an artist. The girl's head is turned by the reception she gets from Italian nobility, and she casts Peter lightly aside to carry on a flirtation with a duke. The affair gets serious, and Elayne asks the duke to marry her, and he, laughing, says that wasn't at all what he meant.

Peter and the duke fight a duel in which Peter is seriously wounded. Elayne, realizing her love for him, goes to the room where he lies unconscious, and nurses him back to health. Thus far the story runs along conventional lines; but it ends in a realistic manner; for these twain do not, as usual, "marry and live happily ever after," but are sundered by a sentiment forcibly and artistically depicted.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 12, "Weighed in the Balance" (Arrow—Two Parts—July 24).—A rich man's son grows up in idleness and luxury, knowing no responsibility. His father suddenly loses all his wealth, dies, and the son has his mother and sister to support. He gets a job in the mills his father owned, and falls in love with the foreman's daughter, who seems to return his affection. But the girl's head is light, and she drops the boy for the superintendent of the mills, known to be a high-flyer. The boy objects to this, and because of his objection is fired. But he has the sympathy of his fellow-workers, who go out on strike in protest, and furnish the action for a drama the end of which is startling.

THE GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 2, "The Underworld" (Balboa—Two Parts—July 24).—"The Underworld" tells of "Gentleman Joe," an ex-convict who has tried to regenerate, but who has met nothing but cruelty at the hands of his fellow-creatures. Joe tries to burglarize the home of John Burton, now a titled millionaire, but is caught. Burton hears his story, sympathizes with him and offers him, in exchange for some tips on the "correct society thing," a position as secretary. Burton takes dancing lessons at Professor Morietti's academy, where Gertrude Brooks, Joe's former sweetheart, is an instructress.

Joe is recognized by an old pal who "gets something on him," and forces Joe to assist him in looting Burton's safe. Joe accidentally kills the crook, and confesses all to Burton, who shields him from the police. But Joe has betrayed his master's confidence, and Burton sends him away, still debating in his mind the urgent question of his life: "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?"

LUKE—CRYSTAL GAZER (Rolin—July 24).—Four "chicken" fanciers, looking over the metropolitan farm, come upon a dame who would have looked better had they been cross-eyed, and they elect poor Snub to "feed" her while they go their merry ways. Luke stumbles into an occult shop, where he gets a job. The chief spiritualist is the mother of the nicest girl Luke has ever seen, and Luke decides to stick around.

The four "chicken" fanciers float in and the old lady "goes into the silences" while the daughter, behind a screen, plays the departed spirit for any one who has the price. She gets Luke to substitute for her while she goes outside, and one of the boys, who has seen her behind the curtain, comes up and grabs a hand—Luke's hand. Of course there is a riot that ends with the crystal ball doing duty for shrapnel.

PAPER PARASOLS (Java—Pathe—July 24).—This film shows the manufacture of the hundreds of thousands of parasols, the ornamental, Oriental effect of which give the proper atmosphere to so many of our lawn parties and costume affairs.

The natives of Java, where these parasols are made, are very adept at this work, as is shown on the screen. The pieces of stout bamboo are cut to a uniform length with one stroke of the heavy, sharp-bladed knife used. Then the frames are shown being made by turning or machining a small block of bamboo on a crude lathe to form the center piece. Sticks of bamboo are then split into thin strips to form the ribs. The covering of the umbrella is more difficult than it appears to be. Four sheets of triangular-shaped paper are pasted onto the frame. Great care must be taken to see that the wet sheets do not tear and that they are evenly placed together. The films show the making of a paper parasol from the use of the crude materials to the assembling of finished product.

ORNATE PAGODAS (Picturesque China—On the same reel as foregoing)—China is a land of shrines, temples and pagodas, almost endless in number and variety, as is shown in this picture. The following subtitles will give an idea of the pictures which they accompany: "Bad roads predominate, most of the traveling being done in palanquins. The carriers relieve each other at various stages of the journey and the passenger proceeds without any perceptible delay." "Passing under fantastically-shaped gateways, up rough-hewn stairways, and on through tropically-verdured paths, their tireless strides soon bring the journey to its end."

"Embowered in blossoming trees and covered with clustering vines, the queer-shaped buildings form beauty spots that delight the eye," etc., etc.

THE MYSTERY OF THE LEAPING FISH (Keystone—June 11).—The cast: Coke Anneyday (Douglas Fairbanks); the Little Fish Blower (Bessie Love); Gent Rolling in Wealth (A. D. Sears); His Female Accomplice (Alma Reubens); the two Jap Accomplices (Charlie Stevens and George Hall).

I. M. Keene, the chief of police, receives a letter informing him of a mysterious gentleman about the neighborhood who is rolling in wealth. Unable to solve the mystery, he sends for the celebrated detective, Coke Anneyday, and he agrees to undertake the job.

In locating the gentleman of wealth, Coke unearths a great opium plot. Two Japs ride leaping fish, which are swimming machines, out to a bell-buoy, where they get opium which has been left there by a smuggler's ship. The plot thickens rapidly. The villains discover they are being watched, and try to make their getaway, observed by the little girl whose duty it is to inflate the fish. Coke, meanwhile, in eating some of the opium acquires an opium jag.

He recovers, however, and takes up the trail with thrilling results in which he has a terrible duel in the dark with the gentleman of wealth, overcomes his enemies with a mysterious drug, and claims the little fish-blower for his own.

LOVE'S GETAWAY (Keystone—June 11).—The cast: Lulu Hardbrow (Fay Tincher); Harry Hurry (Harry Fisher); Deacon Wetherson (Max Davidson); Martha (Kate Toncray); William Hardbrow (Fred Warren).

Harry and Lulu are much in love with each other, but Lulu's father disapproves, and to break off the attachment, sends her to a boarding-school. Arriving at the school, she encourages the attention of the principal as a means of getting more freedom to meet Harry, who is hanging about the grounds, and so arouses the jealousy of Martha, the old lady assistant who loves the principal. A course of lively incidents take place in which the principal tries to drive Harry away, and Martha greatly annoys Lulu. Toward the end, Harry smuggles a set of his own clothes into the dormitory, and in them Lulu manages to make her escape.

THE CAPTIVE GOD (Ince—Five Parts—July 23).—The cast: Chiapa (William S. Hart); Lolomi (Enid Markey); Mexitli (P. D. Tabler); Tecolote (Dorothy Dalton); Montezuma (Robert McKim); Maya (Dorcas Matthews); Cacama (Herbert Farjean); Tuyos (Robert Kortman).

The picture tells the story of a little Spanish boy who is cast upon the shore of the east coast of Mexico early in the sixteenth century, when Mexico was dominated by the Aztec Indians. Never having seen a white person before, the local natives, a tribe called Tehuans, bring him up as a god and call him Chiapa.

When he reaches manhood, Chiapa is given authority over his entire tribe. He falls in love with the priestess, Tecolote, and she yields to his advances although she is quite unworthy of him, and encourages other suitors.

Then the Aztecs hear that under the white god the Tehuans are very prosperous, and start forth to conquer them. The Aztec army is under command of Mexitli, the chief general of Montezuma, the Emperor; and having conquered the Tehuans, he carried off Tecolote as his personal slave.

Chiapa follows as a spy. In the garden of Montezuma, he is wounded by a guard; but Lolomi, the beautiful daughter of the Emperor, saves him. They fall in love. Meanwhile Mexitli has tired of Tecolote, and now seeks the hand of the Princess Lolomi, who would rather die than have him. As the Emperor gives Mexitli his consent, he tries to get the princess by force, and in doing so discovers Chiapa.

Chiapa is sentenced to die at the end of the year on the sacrificial stone. But Lolomi, finding her pleas to her father of no avail, sends word to the Tehuans that their god is captive. An avenging army sweeps down, and there is brought about a sequence of thrilling scenes with a smashing finish.

STRANDED (Fine Arts—Five Parts—July 23).—The cast: H. Ulysses Watts (De Wolf Hopper); Stoner, the manager (Carl Stockdale); the hotel proprietor (Frank Bennett) his mother (Loyola O'Connor); the girl (Bessie Love).

H. Ulysses Watts is an old actor whose particular style of work has so far gone out of fashion that managers no longer have much use for him. At last Watts falls in the company of the Parisian Belles Variety Company, where he gives impersonations. His fellow-players have no particular sympathy with him, save one young girl, an acrobat, and a great friendship springs up between them.

The manager of the company, Stoner, has taken a fancy to the girl and has decided to take the night's receipts at a certain town and flee, taking the girl with him. She refuses to go. During the performance that night she is so nervous that she falls from her trapeze and is injured. So Stoner flees alone, leaving the company stranded.

Old Watts and the girl face the world together. At a nearby town they are giving a Shakespearian revival, and Watts takes her there in hope of getting work. He introduces her as his daughter. He finds plenty to do; and soon is living prosperously, while the little girl gets her first taste of a life of refinement. The young man who runs the local hotel falls in love with her and she with him. But just as things are running smoothly, Stoner turns up.

He tries to blackmail Watts, telling him that unless he gives him money he will reveal the fact that Watts is not the girl's father, and also show up the girl to the staid townsfolk as a former acrobat who wore tights. The wedding guests are waiting. As Ulysses turns to enter the church, Stoner shoots him. Ulysses goes in and reassures the guests—and then comes a thrilling finish.

"Big Bill" (Charles Prince); Seth Moore (Julius D. Cowles); "Glad" Mason (Marguerite Skirvin). Written by Isola Forrester. Produced by Charles Horan.

The miners at Paradise Gulch are bored. In a session at the "Three Cheers" saloon, owned by Seth Moore, they decide that the trouble with their existence is the fact that there are no women in the place. The verdict is that one of them must marry, and they choose "Happy Jack" Lewis, because he is not present. They go to "Happy Jack" Lewis, make him write out an advertisement for a wife, and sent it to neighboring towns. They stipulate that she must be blonde and pretty. At Gold City, Glad Mason, who answers every requirement, is working in the office of Willet and Condon, mining promoters. Since her father's death she has been obliged to shift for herself. Willet's attentions have become so obnoxious that she is at her wits' end to know what to do, when Lewis' advertisement is pointed out to her. In desperation she answers it, enclosing a photograph.

Lewis lines the boys up against the bar and holds them up. Since they have got him into the trouble of getting married, he makes them furnish his shack. He gives a whoop of joy when he sees Glad's photograph among all the ugly ones he receives in answer to his advertisement, but Ben, the bartender, discourages him by saying that probably some old hag sent the picture. "Happy Jack" leaves in haste, first making over his house and his mine to her in recompense for her disappointment. He goes to the junction as Glad is changing trains for Paradise Gulch, and sees for himself what a beauty she is. But one of the boys with whom he has been fighting sees her, too, and without a word the miner gives "Happy Jack" a knock-out blow, and then puts him on the train, bound in the opposite direction. Each of the boys tries to win Glad. They tell her that Lewis is a quitter.

Jumping off at a small station, Lewis is arrested as a suspicious character and thrown into jail. His wire to the boys for identification results in the answer that he is a card-sharp and crook. He escapes, and meets Willet, who offers to buy his mine. He accepts, taking the money, forgetting that he has made over the property to Glad, but robbers soon relieve him of his cash and he reaches Paradise Gulch penniless.

Willet goes to take charge of the property, which he is anxious to claim because "Sid," the assayer, has told him it is of immense value. He finds Glad in possession and has "Happy Jack" arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses. Glad turns over her claim to Willet and Condon on the condition that they will free Lewis, although he implores her not to do so. But "Sid," the assayer, has made a discovery. He whispers something to Glad, and the last cloud is dispelled. He has made a mistake. The sample ore he has thought Lewis' belonged to Glad's father, who had brought it in to be assayed the day before he died. Glad and "Happy Jack" have lost control of the worthless mine, but they begin life together as owners of the magnificent Mason property.

THE RIVER OF ROMANCE (Yorke Film Corp.—Five parts—July 17).—The cast: William Pissam Kellogg, alias "Sam" (Harold Lockwood); Reginald Williams (Lester Cuneo); Henry Davidson (Bert Bushy); Stephen Witherbee (Lee Walker); Mrs. Stephen Witherbee (Mrs. Mathilde Brundage); Poliy Witherbee (Lillian Halpern); Tom Witherbee (Phil Mast); Butler (Dan Hanion); Rosalind Chalmers (May Allison). Written and directed by Henry Otto from the book by E. J. Rath.

Rosalind Chalmers, a New York society girl, goes on an unannounced visit to her friends, the Witherbees, at the Thousand Islands, primarily for the purpose of escaping the unwelcome attention of Reginald Williams. She misses the last boat to their island, and is taken over in the decrepit motorboat of an interesting young man known as Sam. Sam is really William Kellogg, heir to the Davidson millions. During the absence of his uncle, Henry Davidson, Kellogg has broken a handsome vase, and decides to earn the money himself to pay for it. So as One-Cylinder Sam he begins to carry passengers between the islands.

On the way to the Witherbee island Kellogg's motor goes dead. Rosalind's hobby is motors, and she puts the engine in working order in no time. When they reach the island the family has retired for the night. Rosalind tries to climb in a window, but sets off a burglar alarm, and runs to escape the people who come to investigate. Startled by shots, she takes a small boat, and goes out into the river. She hears more shots, this time for Davidson Island. From angry voices she learns that the supposed burglars are there, too. Two motor boats set out. Soon the engine of one goes dead, and Rosalind goes to help. Kellogg, whom she knows as Sam, and whom she things is a burglar, is in the boat. But in spite of this she starts his engine for him, on account of the strange attraction he has for her, and aids his escape from the pursuing boat.

Rosalind and Kellogg thereafter see a great deal of each other in the simple life of the islands. At a hotel dance he appears in his evening clothes, and after getting Rosalind to dance with him, induces her to go for a short walk in the moonlight. He tells her he is madly in love with her, and that he is going to marry her, with her consent or without it. She still thinks he is a burglar, and is frightened. He picks her up and carries her to his boat, but in mid-stream the boat strikes a submerged rock and sinks. Kellogg swims ashore with Rosalind to his uncle's island. He offers to break into the house and get some dry clothes for her and though still thinking he is a burglar she consents. Kellogg arrays himself in fresh clothes, and is greeted joyfully by his uncle. Kellogg hands him a purse containing the money for the vase, earned by his efforts as "One-Cylinder Sam," and introduces him to Rosalind, who is relieved to know that the man she is going to marry is not a burglar.

THE CHILD OF DESTINY (Columbia Pictures Corp.—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Alita (Irene Fenwick); Constance (Mme. Gana Walska); Bob Stange (Robert Elliott); Judge Gates (Roy Applegate); "Weird Willie" (Roy Clair); Professor Jaeger (William Yearance); Oswald Jaeger, his son (Martin J. Faust); Calvin Baker (William Davidson); Putnam (R. A. Bresee); Mrs. Putnam (Elizaheth Le Roy). Directed by William Nigh.

Alita, a child who has been left in the care of Mr. and Mrs. Putnam in a desolate swamp country, reaches the age when she is to be prepared for the world, and the Putnams send word to Judge Gates, her guardian, to come for her. Her life has been spent in the swamps with a half-witted boy, "Weird Willie," and many animals and birds of that country, as her only playmates.

Judge Gates receives the letter at his bachelor apartment, which he shares with a younger friend and companion, Bob Stange. Through the accidental dropping of a marriage license the Judge discovers that Bob is about to become a benedict—despite the fact that they had a compact never to marry, on the theory that all women are deceitful. The Judge recounts a story about one ill-fated marriage that ended in the divorce courts, in which the real tragedy was the little baby which no one seemed to want. Bob turns a deaf ear to this and leaves in anger.

Constance, the one woman Bob has idealized, is older than he. She plays upon his sympathies by telling of her hard work as a dressmaker, when, in reality, she is leading a dual life, and only wants Bob for his money. She is carrying on a liaison with a Calvin Baker, a man about town, and he is calling on her when Bob arrives and tells her a minister is on the way to marry them. Baker hides behind the screen and listens. Bob tells Constance that he has invited his best friend, Judge Gates, to the ceremony. When Constance hears this name she is startled and insists on the ceremony being hurried.

The marriage is performed as the Judge arrives. He recognizes Constance as the one who has ruined his own and his best friend's life. He denounces her, and Bob realizes her perfidy when he finds Baker hidden in the room. Bob and the Judge leave, and go away for a fishing trip, hoping to forget. In the country Bob comes upon Alita, and through a strange chain of circumstances, she is slightly wounded by a shot which her constant protector, "Weird Willie," intended for Bob. Alita falls in love with Bob, for he is the first man she has come in contact with. The Judge decides to take Alita away. Judge Gates puts Alita in charge of a professor to educate her, but she proves, through her hoydenish ways, a source of annoyance to the teacher. Bob receives a letter from his sister, telling him she has found the right girl for him at a summer hotel, where she is stopping. The Judge buys an extensive wardrobe for Alita, and by chance, they go to the same hotel for which Bob is bound.

Bob is startled when his sister leads him into the presence of Constance. Alita meets Constance and the girl is attracted to her. The Judge finds them together and afterwards upbraids Constance. Alita and Bob meet again. Bob goes to Constance, begs her to release him, and to grant him a divorce. The Judge sees Bob enter her room and follows. Alita waits until they leave. She goes to Constance and asks her if she knew Bob before. Constance tells her the truth.

Alita leaves all, and goes back to the swamp country. She cannot face the Putnams, so she runs into the fields instead, where she wishes to die. After Alita leaves Judge Gates tells Constance that Alita is her child. Constance's better nature is aroused and she goes in search of her daughter. Bob and the Judge follow. Constance agrees with the Judge that it is best not to tell Alita the truth, and when Bob and "Weird Willie" find Alita in the swamps, Constance wanders away to her death that Bob may be free to marry the child she has wronged.

THE SILENT BATTLE—(Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Tom Gallatin (J. Warren Kerrigan); Jane Loring (Lois Wilson); Nina Jaffray (Maud George); Coleman Van Duyn (Harry Carter); John Kenyon (Ray Hanford); James Loring (J. F. Connolly). Scenario written by F. McGrew Willis. Directed by Jack Conway.

Tom Gallatin, a brilliant young lawyer, who has inherited a craving for drink, is on the verge of ruining his career by overindulgence. He goes to the Canadian woods to recuperate. The Lorings, wealthy Westerners, have a camp in the vicinity, and one day Gallatin rescues Jane Loring from the clutches of one of the Loring guests, Coleman Van Duyn, who has taken advantage of Jane's defenseless position while she is alone with Van Duyn on a ramble through the woods.

Having driven Van Duyn from his prey, Gallatin starts to escort the girl to the Loring camp, but the pair lose their way. During a heavy storm Gallatin becomes rain soaked and gets a chill. Jane gives Gallatin a draught from her emergency flask of whiskey. Tasting liquor for the first time in months, the fumes go to Gallatin's brain, unsettle his judgment and he attacks the girl. She is rescued by a searching party in the nick of time.

Gallatin begins again "the silent battle" against his insidious enemy. The Lorings go to New York and enter the same social circle in which Gallatin has moved. Nina Jaffray is a society leader who has long schemed to make herself the wife of Gallatin. Coleman Van Duyn has brought to Nina some confusing and mysterious hints of Gallatin having met a young lady at his camp in the woods and there entertained her. Nina's suspicions center upon the Loring girl, and to make certain Nina plans that Gallatin and Jane shall meet at a reception.

Nina takes this occasion to show Jane that Tom's affections have been previously claimed by Nina, and to further impress the Loring girl that she cannot hope for Gallatin's love Nina goes further with her demonstrations—even to the humiliating end of compromising herself with Tom in a situation that Nina plans and in which Tom innocently participates.

All this time Van Duyn has been retrieving his own reputation with Jane and Tom has been trying to establish himself in the Loring girl's favor. Van Duyn has the "inside track" and Nina connives with him that he may hold it, while as a matter of fact Jane Loring is in love with Tom.

When the schemers have finally accomplished their purpose, Nina relents and explains her own share in the plot to turn the Loring girl relentlessly against Gallatin. With Nina's confession the way is cleared to an ultimate reconciliation between Jane and Gallatin.

THE DARING OF DIANA—(Vitagraph—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Diana Pearson (Anita Stewart); Jason Briscoe (Charles Wellesley); John Briscoe (Francis Morgan); Stange (Anders Randolf); Fanchetto (Julia Swayne Gordon); Teague (Doc Donohue); Jimmy Towne (Donald MacBride); Forga (Lou Johnson). Written by Charles Gaskill. Produced by S. Rankin Drew.

Twenty-five years before the story opens, Jason Brisco, owner of the Daily Argus, became embittered by the death of his wife, whose life was snubbed out as her child was born. In his anguish he seeks consolation in travel. After all these years Briscoe's son, John, is editor of the Argus and has won a reputation for absolute honesty. He receives a telegram from Paris telling him to prepare to receive his father, who is coming on the next boat. The days drag for John, who is impatient to get a glimpse of the father he has never seen, but when he arrives John is disappointed. The man does not measure up to the strong, honest character with which John invested his father; his face is cunning, his eyes shifty.

Just before the arrival of his father John had been honored by a visit from the leaders of a certain political faction who came to buy the support of the Argus, but who went away with sad faces. Hearing of the return of the elder Briscoe, they return once more, determined to buy either the support of the Argus or the paper itself. In Jason Briscoe they find a man to their liking, for, although he will not sell his support, he is eager to bargain for the sale of the paper. Despite John's protests arrangements are made, and the signature of Jason Briscoe to the documents is all that is now required. In fond anticipation of the large purchase price, Briscoe is about to affix his signature to the bill of sale, when the door is thrown open unceremoniously and Diana Pearson, star reporter of the Argus, enters and commands the attention of all those present.

Recognizing her and terrified at her appearance at this inopportune moment, Briscoe jumps from his chair and tries to escape, but runs right into the arms of a waiting policeman, who brings him back and forces him to listen to Diana's tale. After the arrival of Jason Briscoe from Paris Diana had seen a woman following his automobile, and thought it worth her while to investigate the cause. On reaching Briscoe's house she heard a loud report, and entering found the woman on the floor, shot. Diana attempted to leave the house to summon aid, but was detained and thrown into a cellar with the other woman by "Briscoe" and his valet. Here, when she regained consciousness, the woman told Diana of how the man who is posing as Briscoe had trapped the real Briscoe in Paris and left him in the care of an Apache on the outskirts of the city. His real name, she said, is Stange, and he is one whom she has ample reason to hate. Diana was horrified by the story, but she realized her helplessness; she was unable to prevent the sale of the paper. Then she thought of a plan, and made Stange her innocent accomplice. Unknowingly he carried word of her plight to the Argus office with him, and one of the reporters started out immediately with a number of policemen to her rescue. After her release Diana rushed straight to the office where she was fortunate in arriving in time to prevent the illegal sale.

Seeing that all is known, Stange makes a frantic attempt to escape from his captors, but is shot to death in the struggle. Two weeks later a cable to the Prefect of Police in Paris has secured the release of Briscoe from the Apache's den, and in the office of the Argus he is introduced to his future daughter-in-law, Diana Pearson, reporter.

MOVIE MONEY (Vitagraph—July 24).—Written by Graham Baker. Directed by Charles Dickson.

In a movie show Pete falls asleep and dreams of the time when he acted before the camera in a chase scene, and stole a wallet full of money from the pocket of the director. In the chase he dropped the wallet and never regained possession of it. When he wakes up he sees himself on the screen in the picture of which he has been dreaming and also sees the spot where he dropped the money. He rushes from the theater and out to the spot where he is confident of finding his lost treasure, but finds, to his dismay, that a jail has been built right over the spot where he had dropped the money. He hires a jitney, attaches a rope to the jail, the other end to the flivver and proceeds to drag the jail from its foundation. It passes over a box of dynamite, which blows up and buries Pete in the debris. He emerges triumphant, however, for he has the wallet. On opening it, however, he finds it full of stage money.

THE PRINCE CHAP (Selig—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: William Peyton (Marshal Neilan); Arline Arrington (Mary Charleson); Claudia, Peyton's ward (Mary Charleson); Alice Travers (Bessie Eyton); Alice's mother (Camile D'Arcy); Runion, a valet (George Fawcett); Helen Travers (Margaret Fawcett); Paul Helmer (Cecil Holland); Jack Rodney, Earl of Huntington (Charles Gerard); Phoebe Puckers (Fannie Cohen). Written by Edward Peple. Directed by Marshall Neilan.

William Peyton, a struggling New York sculptor, in love with Alice Travers, a beautiful but cold and calculating young society girl, accepts an invitation from his friend, Jack Rodney, Earl of Huntington, to seek his fortune in London. Alice promises to wait until he makes good. Arline Arrington, a model who is forced to work for the support of her infant daughter and her good-for-nothing husband, is hired by Peyton to pose for a masterpiece he has planned. He also hires Runion, a valet.

Helen Travers, cousin of Alice, calls at Peyton's studio, and just as she enters the model faints and falls in Peyton's arms. She places the wrong construction on the incident. With the passing years, Arline becomes the victim of a lingering malady. Knowing her days are numbered, she exacts a promise from Peyton to always care for her daughter. Arline dies and Claudia, her daughter, learns to call Peyton her "daddy" and he tells her the story of "Princess Alice" and the "Prince Chap." This is a story of his own life.

Helen Travers encounters Peyton and Claudia in a London park, and, hearing the girl call Peyton "daddy," she promptly dispatches her information to her cousin in New York. As a result, Alice hurries post haste to London with Paul Helmer, a Wall street broker, now a suitor for her hand. Arriving at Peyton's studio, Alice and Helmer encounter Claudia during the artist's absence and hear her call him "father." As a result Alice renounces him and later marries Helmer.

After the passing of a decade, we find Claudia a beautiful girl of eighteen. Peyton is now wealthy. Helmer, who has been a brutal and dissolute husband, dies, and Alice immediately gets in touch with Peyton to tell him that she is now free. The Earl of Huntington proposes marriage to Claudia, but she refuses. He divines the reason. She now loves Peyton in a different manner than she did as his ward.

Alice calls at the studio to win Peyton and Claudia overhears her tell Peyton that she thought all along that Claudia was his daughter and pleads for forgiveness. Claudia believes, as a result, that she is standing between Peyton and happiness. She resolves to flee.

The Earl of Huntington arrives at this juncture and Claudia tells him she is now ready to marry him. Knowing of Peyton's love for her, however, he refuses and later Peyton learns that Claudia has always looked upon him as her "Prince Chap" and that she has always hoped to be his princess. He takes her into his arms.

GEORGE KLEINE.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (No. 8—"The Mesh of Mystery"—Two Parts—July 10).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Stephen Royce (Henry Kolker); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Frank Mulry (Frank Belcher); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Mrs. David Stafford (Jule Power); Judge Freeman (Henry Weaver); Gideon Trask (Frank McGlynn).

Gloria Stafford's scream just as she fainted upon seeing the supposed murder of Richard Freneau, her fiance, at the base of the Soldiers' Monument, just across the way from the Stafford home on Riverside Drive, New York, aroused the household and the night nurse, Pierpont Stafford, and others came rushing to discover the cause of the alarm. When Gloria recovered enough to relate what she had seen through the binoculars from her window, her hearers could scarcely believe their ears and thought her suffering from delirium.

Dr. Royce was summoned and to satisfy Gloria that no murder had taken place went across to investigate at the base of the monument, returning to report that all was quiet and still there. Next morning Gloria received a telegram signed "Freneau," reporting his arrival at the first city on his route, and the others felt relieved. Gloria sent a wire in answer and consternation reigned in the Stafford home an hour later when the wire was returned with the message, "Party cannot be found."

Later other wires came, signed "Freneau," from Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago and other points, but each time a reply was sent it was returned with the same response. And then came a day when the morning paper chronicled the finding of the dead body of Freneau in the bay. Gloria fainted, then recovered and as the chapter closes vows to find the murderer of her lover and bring him to justice.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE—(No. 9—"The Shadow of Scandal"—Two Parts—July 17).—Gloria Stafford thought the worst was over when she learned by the newspapers that Freneau, her finance, was really dead, her grief being momentarily dulled in her new resolve to trace down his murderer. But next morning when the dainty frock that had been ordered as her bridal gown arrived her grief was brought back anew, and she sank to the floor.

An hour later she gained strength to put the bridal finery away in the box—as in a coffin—and then she faced the world again more fiercely resolved than ever to herself run down the murderer of her intended husband. Dr. Royce, meanwhile, disclosed to Pierpont Stafford what he knew concerning the real character of Freneau and how close Lois Stafford, David's wife, had brought scandal to the door through her reckless flirtations with Freneau. The two agreed the police must never be put on the trail lest the publicity, which would surely follow, should disclose the scandal in David Stafford's home.

Gloria found it hard to understand why the police should not be summoned immediately, but her father and Dr. Royce were resolved she should never learn of Freneau's villainy, lest it blast her entire life. In an endeavor to make her forget her grief Pierpont suggested she discard her mourning gown and engagement ring, but, alas, this only caused Gloria to grieve the more. And not even her lover's body was to be given Gloria to bury, for his mother in a Colorado town wired for the remains and they were shipped to her.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE—(No. 10—"Tangled Threads"—Two Parts—July 24).—During the first few days following her discovery that Freneau, her fiance, had been murdered, Gloria Stafford yearned again and again for the engagement ring which her father had at last induced her to discard. One day she stealthily abstracted it from Pierpont's pocket when he wasn't looking. In beginning her investigation of Freneau's death she went first of all to the office of Mulry, Dick's partner, and while there was amazed to learn that Lois was also calling on Mulry regarding "poor Mr. Freneau." This led Gloria to suspect Dick had not been as true to her as he had vowed, and later on when she accidently discovered that the firm of Mulry & Freneau had branch offices in all of the cities from which Freneau's letters had apparently come, she understood at last how easy it had been for Freneau to write the letters in advance and give them to some other member of the firm to mail back to her from each of the cities in which a branch office was located.

At last her eyes were open. She understood that Freneau had deceived her. Thoroughly indignant, she rushed home, only an hour later, to decide that Dick never could have been false, and that she was a wicked girl to even suspect him. Meantime Royce had cautioned Mulry against revealing any of Freneau's perfidy to Gloria should she come to him for information—a promise that was cheerfully given. David and Lois meanwhile become more loverlike than they had been in a long while and leave for the country home to enjoy a second honeymoon, extending an invitation to Gloria to visit them there. At first she refuses, but later accepts, desiring an opportunity to study Lois at close range and decide for herself if Freneau can have been paying her sister-in-law attention the while he was courting herself.

the fact that there is no one home and the house locked up, Musty takes the stove in through the window, unlocks the door from the inside, takes the stove back out through the window again, delivers it through the door in the approved manner, locks the door on the inside and exits through the window.

Down the street comes a woman of ancient Irish lineage, who has discovered a new way of beating the high cost of living. She is following a grocer's boy who is delivering a sack of flour. There is a hole in the sack, and the shrewd old biddy is catching in her apron the flour that escapes. When her apron is filled, she starts for home, only to collide with Musty, who is hurrying about his business on his trusty bike. Musty receives a beating from the economical one.

Musty goes to sleep and is aroused by his boss in a unique manner. The boss pulls a cord and about a ton of bricks descend upon our hero. As a result Musty is bent double and has to be straightened out by some carpenters, upon whom he calls for help. The carpenters give Musty a window frame to deliver, but he gets entangled with a hitching post to the delapidation of the frame. Musty is summoned to a restaurant to awaken a sleeping waiter, which he does effectively.

A cheating gambler is caught and is ejected from the game. Imprisoned in a room, he calls for a messenger boy, telling Musty's boss over the phone that it is a case of life or death. Musty hurries to save a life. The cheater changes clothes with him, and thus disguised, passes through the blockade of indignant sharps unhampered. Musty, clad in the unfair one's garments, is not so fortunate. He is captured and thrown through a brick wall. Like a projectile he hurtles through the air and strikes the cheater, bringing him to earth. Musty and cheater recognize each other and Musty calmly strikes the hoodoo over the head with a brick. The cheater politely takes the brick from Musty's hand and returns the compliment. Then both of them fade away into a sleep.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER ("While You Wait"—No. 3 of Series 2—July 5).—Out of a job, Musty haunts the employment agency. The boss tells him that help is scarce these days, and that whatever anyone calls for, Musty will have to be it. In order to fit him for holding any job whatsoever, the boss turns him loose with a variety of costumes, and Musty proves his ability as a quick change artist. The boss receives a call from a fair client, who wants a maid, and Musty dons feminine regalia and answers the call. He gets the job. One of his first tasks is to go to the employment agency and get a butler for his new mistress. When he arrives at the agency the boss tells him he can be the butler, too. Musty changes to a butler's costume and goes back, but takes his maid's costume with him. Being both butler and maid in the same house, Musty has to move in lively fashion to keep on both jobs at once. Then, to make things worse, he is sent, in his capacity of butler, to hire a gardener. The employment agency boss gives Musty a third costume and another pair of false whiskers and sends him to hold down the third job in addition to the original two.

Musty strides happily into the house when he suddenly catches sight of himself in the mirror. The result is almost fatal. One look at his own face bedecked in the false mustaches nearly finishes him, but he braces up and bravely sees the trouble through. In his capacity of maid, our hero is set to washing windows. The ladder on which he is standing falls through the window and Musty escapes a long fall only by hanging to the sill by his knees. His fair mistress rescues him and Musty sets to work to rescue the ladder. He drops a rope and calls upon an amiable entomologist for help. The entomologist leaves the butterfly he is chasing to come to Musty's aid. He ties the rope to the ladder and signals Musty to haul away. And Musty does, but the unfortunate bug expert gets his legs entangled in the ladder and is pulled upward, only to be lowered several times into a well-filled rain-barrel when Musty and his mistress, whom he has called upon for help, lose their grip upon the rope.

Finally the victim is hauled into and through the house, and Musty attaches the rope to an automobile, which dashes off, dragging ladder, entomologist and, as a climax, Musty himself, who is caught in the mix-up as the picture fades.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER ("Local Showers"—No. 4 of Series 2—July 12).—Musty sleeps beside an open window and the morning breezes set his hollow tooth agoing. So Musty goes to the "painless dentist." He is ushered first into the ante-room, where his joy at knowing that teeth are pulled free of charge receives a set-back, for the attractive office girl begins to weep. She just can't bear the thought of what is going to happen to our hero.

She attaches a large pair of tongs to Musty and gives the signal to the engineer, who operates the "power behind the uplift movement" in the shape of a steam hoist. After being thoroughly shaken, so that all his loose change falls into a hopper devoted to that purpose, Musty is hoisted up many floors through a series of trap-doors, to the topmost stage of the skyscraper. On the way up he meets a workman with a ladder. The results to the latter are disastrous and he falls through all the trap-doors to the engine room.

Musty is taken off the unique elevator and hauled into the reception room of the "painless dentist." There he is discouraged by the sight of so many sufferers, and further depressed by the howls of agony coming from the dentist's operating room. At last Musty's turn comes and he discovered that the painless dentist really is a painless dentist—it doesn't hurt the doctor a bit. Musty fails to succumb to the gas administered, but a few judiciously directed blows over the head render him unconscious, and the offending molar is removed. Musty is then propelled from the office in unique fashion, after being restored to consciousness by a downpour of water. He lands in the "drying room." After a few turns on the spit before the open fire, he is thoroughly dried. He escapes from the drying room by dashing up the chimney, but is pursued by a heavy stream from a fire hose, which lifts him up the flue to the roof of the building, where he falls through a series of chutes which again convey him to the bottom floor. Here he finds two ambulance attendants waiting with a stretcher and is much relieved when they carry him into a hospital.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER ("A Pirate Bold"—No. 5 of Series 2—July 19).—Musty goes for a day's fishing, but bites are scarce and he whiles away the time reading an exciting story entitled "The Bold, Bad Pirate." He goes to sleep sitting on the edge of a bridge and dreams of hidden treasure and dark deeds on the Spanish Main. He is awakened by a boat which passes under the bridge catching his feet and pulling him aboard the craft. The oarsman is highly indignant at Musty's unceremonious embarkation and lands him violently ashore.

Musty is much impressed by his dream. He locates a spot which reminds him of the place where he buried a chest of gold in his dream and starts to dig for the hidden pieces of eight. He is interrupted by a cop, who arrests him. The cop calls the police patrol, a wheel-barrow affair, and Musty is trundled off to jail. Arraigned before the captain, he is given the third degree, but refuses to tell his secret. Finally, when confronted with a loaded cannon, Musty is alarmed by the sputtering of the fuse and tells his story. He is cast into a cell.

Musty, like all model prisoners, awaits his opportunity to escape. He finds that his cot is very springy and by jumping on it succeeds in having himself hurled as if from a catapult through the roof. He makes himself a false mustache of grass and so passes the guard. He hurries to a costumer's for a disguise and after donning it hastens back to the place where he was digging in the street when arrested. No sooner has he started to dig when he is again arrested. He tries to get away, and cleverly induces his captors to get in the push patrol. Then he upsets it and runs, but collides with a telegraph pole, falls and is recaptured. In the station he breaks away from the cops again, hides by sitting on the captain's bench. He whacks the oops with the captain's gavel, placing them completely hors de combat, and once more is free.

Musty goes back to the costumer's and rents a suit of armor, which he dons. No more is it upon his back, however, than his back begins to itch. What did King Arthur do in a case like this? We don't know, but the costumer found a way to relieve our hero. Musty then hurries back to his hole in the street, more determined than ever to find the hidden treasure. But, alas, that pestiferous copper is always on the job. Musty finds a way to get out of the armor without being seen and goes back to his digging. The copper, however, gets a great shock when the armor, in which he thinks Musty is still encased, suddenly comes to life and flees. After a long chase the officer regains possession of his cast steel captive and takes it to the station. Can openers, crow-bars and other devices are employed to open the armor, but in vain. Finally one of the cops hits it with a sledge-hammer. It falls to pieces, revealing no one on the interior.

Meanwhile Musty continues to dig. He breaks a water main and is caught in the deluge. This is the last straw and he gives up his treasure seeking in disgust.

PARAMOUNT.

DAVY CROCKETT (Pallas Pictures—Five parts—July 13).—The cast: Davy Crockett (Dustin Farnum); Eleanor Vaughn (Winifred Kingston); James Vaughn (Harry de Vere); Hector Royston (Herbert Standing); Oscar Crampton (Howard Davies); Neil Crampton (Page Peters); Mrs. Crockett (Lydia Yeamans Titus). Directed by William Taylor.

Eleanor, the daughter of James Vaughn, a wealthy landowner, is a frequent visitor at the home of the Widow Crockett. The widow is supported by her son, Davy, who is a famous Indian fighter, hunter and trapper. Eleanor often accompanies Davy when he goes to inspect his traps. One day Eleanor stirs his imagination by reading to him the romantic story of Lochinvar. As she reads the vision materializes before Davy's eyes and the impression of the knightly conduct of this hero leads afterward to a great event in their lives.

Eleanor and her father go on a visit to England, leaving Colonel Royston, a life-long friend, in charge. The colonel's only weakness is a fondness for cards, and during their absence he loses more than he can pay. Hard pressed, he forges the absent Vaughn's name to a note. Vaughn dies at sea and Crampton, the holder of the note, becomes aware of the forgery. By threats of exposure he coerces Royston into helping his nephew, Neil Crampton, in his plan to marry Eleanor. Neil by his polished manner and flattery wins Eleanor while the bashful Crockett loses ground.

Eleanor and Neil ride into the mountains searching for mistletoe. They nearly perish in a blizzard and are attacked by wolves. Davy Crockett saves their lives. The true worth of this great frontiersman and the underlying motive of Neil's courtship are impressed upon Eleanor by this harrowing experience.

Eleanor decides upon a strange course and in a unique manner shows Davy Crockett her preference for him. He plans a surprise for the visiting guests at the rapidly approaching wedding of Eleanor and Neil. The appointed day arrives—and the guests are given the thrill of their lives.

THE DREAM GIRL (Lasky—Five Parts—July 17).—The cast: Meg Dugan (Mae Murray); Jim Dugan (Theodore Roberts); "English" Hal (Charles West); Benjamin Merton (James Neill); Tom Merton (Earle Foxe); Alice Merton (Mary Mersch). Produced by Cecil B. De Mille.

Meg Dugan, a waif of the slums, whose mother is dead, lives with her drunken father in San Francisco. Despite her rough environments, there has developed in little Meg's soul an intense love of things beautiful, and a great taste for dancing. Fleeing from her father, Meg takes refuge in an old ash barrel and there discovers a dilapidated volume of "King Arthur and His Knights of the Round Table." Deeply interested in the pictures in this book, Sir Gallahad at once becomes the hero of her dreams.

Dugan and "English" Hal, a "black sheep" of an old English family, run a "Social Club," where liquor is unlawfully sold. The club is raided, but Hal and Dugan manage to get enough money together to carry out their plan of posing Hal as "Lord Henry Trevor." Hal kisses Meg against her will, and in the fight which results between him and Meg's father, the latter is shot and left for dead. Meg again takes refuge in her ash barrel where she is found by a policeman and hustled off to the Detention Home.

Tempted by Merton's beautiful flower garden next door, she climbs the wall and is feasting on the fruits and flowers when old Merton appears. Meg hides under a table. "Lord Hal," seeking out Merton to ask for his granddaughter Alice's hand, discovers the volume of "King Arthur" lying on the table, and is much disturbed when he recognizes it as Meg's. Unable to stay in her cramped position under the table any longer, Meg crawls out and tells the astonished Merton her story.

That night, Meg, reading her beloved book, is attracted by the music next door and again climbs the wall. The occasion is a fancy dress ball which Alice is giving in honor of her brother Tom's birthday. Tom, disgusted with trying to "turkey-trot" in the suit of armor he is wearing, goes into the garden to "cool off." Meg, believing him to be her real knight who has come to rescue her, nestles confidingly on his breast. Tom assures the little waif he has indeed come to rescue her. At his suggestion, old Merton takes Meg on probation with the idea of adopting her. "English" Hal nearly faints when he recognizes Meg. Much to Hal's and Meg's discomfiture, a slumming party is suggested, and they accidentally find Dugan, who recognizes Hal. Hal tells him about Meg and Tom. The two men plot to "work" Tom for the price of their silence, and when Tom is approached, he gives Dugan a ten thousand dollar check, the birthday present from his grandfather.

To save Alice from the fake "Lord," Meg tells his story to Merton and Tom. Hal confesses that he is "English," and is arrested. Dugan's heart softens as he hears Meg's heartbroken farewell to Tom, because her "father can't associate with high-brows" and she refuses to leave him alone, and he slips the check on which he has written his promise not to bother her again under the door. As he goes down the battered old stairway, he meets the aristocratic old Merton, and the two men glower at each other as they both realize the great gulf between them. Old Merton's heart is touched when he sees the home Meg has left, and slowly opens his arms to receive the little waif who has proved herself so worthy.

AN INTERNATIONAL MARRIAGE (Morosco—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Florence Brent (Rita Jolivet, Countess de Cippico); Bennington Brent (Marc Robbins); John Oglesby (Elliott Dexter); Eleanor Williamson (Grace Carlisle); Mrs. Williamson (Olive White); Duke of Buritz (Courtenay Foote); Count Janefski (Page Peters); the Archduke Ferdinand (Herbert Standing); Agnes Sotherton (Adelaide Woods); the Archduchess (Jean Woodbury). Directed by Frank Lloyd.

Bennington Brent, the laundry king, uses the phrases of the trade to shrewdly express his observations. His daughter, Florence Brent, being of another generation, reflects the finish or, as Brent expresses it, "the satin gloss" of wealth and elegance.

Congressman John Oglesby, her chum from childhood, is a handsome young statesman and a prominent member of the National Assembly. Florence visits her chum, Eleanor Williamson, who lives in Washington and meets Eleanor's fiance, Count Krinburg. The Duke of Buritz, a fellow-countryman of the Count, endeavors to corrupt Oglesby for international-political reasons. But he fails in his estimate of the man.

The Duke, who is the ambassador for his country at the American Capitol, is introduced to Florence by the Count, on whom she has made a great impression. The attentiveness of the Count to Florence leads to the breaking of her engagement by Eleanor Williamson, but having inherited an estate, the Count feels independent of international marriages.

The blase attitude of the Duke is changed to deep and sudden interest by Florence's beauty and charm. Florence Brent, in turn, is dazzled by this foreign nobleman of royal blood. The Duke is so entranced that he proposes to and is accepted by Florence. He departs for his country to arrange for the wedding. He meets with the opposition of his family, but prevails upon them to invite Florence to Buritz.

Because of his love for Florence, John Oglesby accedes to her father's request and goes abroad with the Brents. The Duke is playing a desperate game to overcome the obstacles in the way of his marriage to Florence, and as plan after plan fails, he forces Florence into a tangled situation. The subtle deception of the Duke and Count is discovered and shown up by Oglesby, who solves the seemingly impossible tangle.

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

THE WEAKNESS OF MAN (Peerless—Five Parts—July 10).—The cast: David Spencer (Holbrook Blinn); Janice Lane (Eleanor Woodruff); John Spencer (Richard Wagerman); Dr. Stone (Charles D. Mackey); "Babbie" Norris (Alma Hanlon). Directed by Barry O'Neill.

David Spencer, a young spendthrift, returns from France because of his father's ill-health. This has awakened a sense of duty within him, and it is inferred that he will take up his father's work and marry the ward, Janice Lane, who is the antithesis of everything he has been. Dr. Stone, the family physician, loves Janice, but she is almost unaware of it, her whole love being centered in David.

"Babbie" Norris, a fun loving creature, who is among his friends on his homeward journey, is in love with David and by this deep love, awakens a response. Shortly after David's return home, his engagement to Janice is announced and that night, Babbie, broken-hearted, comes to his town apartment and, seeing a life-sized portrait of herself in his room, cuts the painting from the frame and draping herself similar to the picture, steps into the frame. He returns and while gazing at the supposed picture, she steps out. He weakens for a moment and then tells her that she must give him up forever.

Babbie's hold upon David grows so strong that he determines to break with Janice. He gives a costume party in his apartment to celebrate the termination of his engagement. During the party, one of his guests phones to David's father, who rushes to the apartment. During a fight with one of his guests, David receives a wound on his shoulder from a curved scimitar. At this time Mr. Spencer arrives, the shock proves fatal and he dies.

As stipulated in Mr. Spencer's will, David marries Janice and renounces his old life, but after a short while domestic life becomes irksome for him and he seeks his old associates. A friend discovers David and Babbie entering the stage door and phones to Janice, who rushes to the theater and confronts David in Babbie's dressing room. In a tense scene, David says, "It is better that you divorce me" and Janice, in horror, says, "The church forbids it."

David, realizing the misery he is causing his wife, decides on suicide, goes to a section of the river not far from his house, sees the body of a man in the river, changes clothes with him and disappears. When the body is found, the face is unrecognizable and because of the clothes, it is identified as David. Janice, satisfied that it is David, marries Dr. Stone. Unable to get money without revealing his identity, David sinks lower and lower.

An acquaintance recognizes him one day, has him arrested for some faked-up insurance fraud, and at the trial, because of his repeated denial of his identity and altered appearance, everybody, even his wife, fail to recognize him, with the exception of Babbie, who testifies falsely, as they had planned to go abroad together after his release. Unable to hold the pose any longer, when his daughter is called to identify him, he grabs up a pen knife one of the lawyers was using and kills himself.

SALLY IN OUR ALLEY (Peerless—Five Parts—July 17).—The cast: Sally McGill (Muriel Ostriche); Paul Taylor (Carlyle Blackwell); Mr. McGill (Pat Foy); Mrs. McGill (Mrs. Foy); Ben (Walter D. Greene); Isabel (Jean Shelby). Directed by Travers Vale.

Sally McGill, a little Irish girl, brought up in a particularly sordid section, is compelled to work to support her entire family. Ben Blaney, the young foreman where she works, loves little Sally. Mrs. Rockwell, wealthy and childless, finds joy in taking a limited number of the poorest children to her country home each summer, and she selects those whom she will take. While visiting the lower East Side, which is distinguished by the name of "Pigtail Alley," she meets Sally and impulsively asks her to go along to earn her board and keep by caring for and helping with the children. Sally is overjoyed.

Ben Blaney, however, proposes to Sally and is rejected. Mrs. Rockwell's niece, Isabelle, is jealous of Sally and takes a violent dislike to her. Sally's ambition is to become a refined lady like those about her, and she is attracted to Paul Taylor, but knows she is inferior to him.

Isabelle succeeds in having Sally discharged. She then goes to work in a millinery store where she has opportunities to learn the refined ways she so admires, and joins a library to study on this subject. Mrs. Rockwell, in need of a maid, seeks little Sally out and offers her the position, and she again meets Paul, who proposes to her on her way home one evening, but she, realizing the great social gulf between them, does not consent and tells him he must never see her again.

She leaves Mrs. Rockwell's employment to become an artist's model and because she pledged Mrs. Rockwell to secrecy about her new address, Paul goes to her mother, who, believing there is a possibility of a rich marriage, gives him Sally's address. Paul waits for Sally and escorts her home, standing in the doorway for a chat. Ben sees them just as Paul is embracing Sally and in a rage strikes Paul down.

Later, when Ben learns that Paul has asked for Sally in marriage, he tells Sally that they are not made of the same clay, and that she has outgrown "Pigtail Alley," and he hopes that she will be happy with Paul. She goes to Paul and he holds her in his arms and finishes the sentence he started in the hallway, which Ben interrupted, "When do we start for South America?"

PAYING THE PRICE (Paragon—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Judith Corbin (Gail Kane); Gen. Corbin, U. S. A. (Robert Cummings); Mrs. Towne (Lydia Knott); Paul Towne (George Relph); Richard Tracy (Gladden James); Evan Vrooman (Geo. Magaroni); Countess Nimy (June Elvidge). Scenario written by Gardner Hunting. Directed by Frank H. Crane.

Paul Towne returns from a cruise and is greeted by his mother and Judith Corbin, daughter of General Corbin, U. S. A., retired, whose estates are adjoining. Paul and Judith have been reared together and are like brother and sister. After his return, Paul is sent to Washington, where he meets Richard Tracy, a lieutenant in the army. They become friends. Paul invites him to his house, where he meets Judith. They become friends at once. Their friendship grows to love, they become engaged and later are married.

In Washington, however, Richard has met a man named Vrooman, who represents himself to be a wealthy man of leisure, who introduces him to an adventuress known as the Countess Nimy. Vrooman is really the head of the secret service for a foreign government, and Nimy one of his operatives, who runs a fashionable gambling place in Washington society. Richard is introduced to this place, where he plays, winning at first. Paul, who has come to realize his love for Judith, takes a cruise to forget her. While out on "The Wadsworth," United States torpedo boat destroyer No. 60, he learns that the torpedoes do not explode properly, so he endeavors to invent a new explosive.

After the honeymoon, Richard and Judith locate in Washington, where Judith's father, through his influence, has procured a good position for his son-in-law. Richard is cool to Judith, but noticeably amiable to Nimy, who plays with him as with a toy. Judith returns home, and leading the gay life of society, Richard is soon without funds. Nimy induces Vrooman to advance him money on I. O. U.'s which Richard gives. Returning home, Judith learns that Paul is working in a shack built back of the Towne home, where he is trying his experiments. She assists him and takes down notes for him. Soon they come to learn that their love is for each other, but there is a barrier, and they must never think of love again.

Just as Paul strikes the right formula, he transcribes it to Judith, telling her to copy it carefully and preserve it for him. At this time Vrooman informs Richard that he must pay back his loans at once. Richard begs for more time, and while conversing, Vrooman informs Richard that Paul is working on some explosive formula, and that if he can procure the formula, there will be a neat little fortune in it for him. That night Richard obtains the notes from Judith's room, copies the formula, but is discovered by his wife. There is a scene in which Richard tells Judith that he was looking for Paul's love letters, and that if he saw them together again he would kill both of them.

Paul goes aboard the torpedo destroyer "Wadsworth" to try his experiment, being accompanied by General Corbin and Judith. The captain of the "Wadsworth" informs Paul that he will try the first torpedo against Clarges Rock. In the meantime, Vrooman and Richard decide to watch the test, but not until a shadow of the United States Government has trailed them to a launch, where, making his identity known, he goes as mechanic on the boat. There is a derelict not far from Clarges Rock, and the two men decide they will watch the experiments from aboard the derelict. The first torpedo is launched against the rock, splitting the rock in half—the first time any torpedo had registered such an explosion.

Paul's formula is found effective, but the captain orders another trial. The derelict, which has been a menace to shipping for some time, is made the target. With great accuracy the second torpedo is sent on its journey. Just as it is launched Vrooman and Richard attempt to escape, but too late. The torpedo strikes the derelict amidship. There is a terrible explosion. The old ship is blown to smithereens, and the two spies are killed. As the destroyer heads off for port, the launch bearing the United States Secret Service agent notifies the captain that two spies, Evan Vrooman and Richard Tracy, were aboard the derelict when it exploded. Upon learning this Judith collapses, but, after recovering from her shock, realizes that Richard, unworthy of her love and unfaithful as he had proved himself to be, met his master, and, with the obstacles now removed, she and Paul could renew the love and happiness which had been theirs from childhood, save for Richard's presence between them.

TECHNIQUE of the PHOTOPLAY

THIRD EDITION

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

ROBERT WILSON NEAL, A. M.

Author of "Short Stories in the Making," Etc. Instructor of Journalism Massachusetts Agricultural College, says:

A FEW weeks ago, in print, I named your Technique of the Photoplay—second edition—as ahead of everything written on the photodrama. But it isn't. The third edition is far better. I don't know anyone who can put more into one short sentence, or make it clearer, or give it more energy or interest or season it more with sound information and common sense. You wrote me not long ago you were uncertain as to the wisdom of putting the price at three dollars. If the selling price is to be adjusted to its potential worth to students or practitioners of photoplay writing, I think you are wrong. Any man or woman really in earnest about learning to write photoplays can afford to pay ten or twenty dollars for such a help. It is not merely the information and sound sense that makes the book valuable: it's the stimulus of its personality, its forcefulness and energy and inspiration. I have spent a large portion of my life in the classroom either as student or teacher. Speaking from that experience, I do not hesitate to express my conviction that any industrious and persistent person, with a reasonable equipment of brains and dramatic sense, can with a book like yours perfect himself in the art—train and develop himself as effectually and as thoroughly as he could possibly do in any of the subjects commonly taught in the classroom under the supervision of teachers. Indeed, I believe that, for most men who really have the right sort of stuff in them, self-training with such a treatise will be more profitable in the end than any formal course can be. Whether that is right or not, your book is one of the best practical texts I ever saw.

The third edition comprises 398 pages, plus eight, but through the selection of the type it offers more than 125,000 words of instruction and example, more than double the number of words in a full length novel. It is divided into a graduated course of study for classroom or individual work, and covers every aspect of the work. Three dollars, postpaid.

Opportunity Knocks but Once

A New Invention Revolutionizes an Industry.

A basic patent has just been granted by the United States Patent Office covering a new machine for the projection of moving pictures.

It can be manufactured at a cost that will make competition by any standard machine on the market impossible.

It works upon an entirely new principle—that of manipulation of the light, as opposed to the manipulation of the film in present machines.

Its principal feature is its simplicity, coupled with the small amount of precision work needed.

It has no shutter and the movement of the film is continuous; thus eliminating all the mechanism of the intermittent movement.

The projected picture is flickerless, owing to the fact that the shutter is eliminated, thus allowing a greater percentage of light to reach the screen.

A demonstration by a working model will be given responsible parties by appointment.

Address all communications to—

L. G. M., care of M. P. W., 17 Madison Avenue, New York City

This Basic Patent is for Sale!

How Much Are You Paying to Ventilate Your Theatre?

Are you sometimes tempted to reduce your ventilating bills by cutting out some of the fans? Don't do it. That is more expensive than keeping them going, for the moment your theatre is known to have poor ventilation your box office receipts go down. If you are paying too much for fresh air, get better service by installing
